RUN BUSTER, RUN HERE COMES THE KISSING BUG
A HOME RUN

Dear Billy
Just you look in the directory if you wish to know how many relations I've got. I never knew I had so many Cousins before. I went with ma on a visit.— Gee! cousins to right of me cousins to left of me, Cousins in front of me vollied and thundered. But what astonished me is that most of them are nearly all girls.

Billy I'm getting to be a man's suffragist like Henry George "I am for men" poor men

NOW!

RESOLVED

THAT AFFECTION IS ALL RIGHT. BUT THIS OSCULATORY MANIFESTATION OF THE SAME IS BEING INDULGED IN TO AN SUPERLATIVE DEGREE. GROWN PEOPLE ARE INFLICTING KISSES ON CHILDREN WHO DO NOT WISH TO BE KISSED. PLEASE GROWN PEOPLE, WONT YOU STOP ANNOYING PRETTY LITTLE CHILDREN. I'VE KNOWN OF PEOPLE WHO WOULD KISS OTHER PEOPLES CHILDREN THEN GO HOME AND SLAP THEIR OWN. A PERSON WHO WOULD STRIKE A CHILD HAS NO BUSINESS TO HAVE ONE. THE DEAR LITTLE THINGS RESPOND EASILY TO KINDNESS WHY NOT TRY IT ON THEM. THEY WILL NEITHER LOVE NOR TRUST PARENTS WHO LOSE THEIR TEMPERS AND PUNISH THEM. LETS TRY KINDNESS - IT WORKS ON GROWN PEOPLE AND CHILDREN AND ANIMALS

REALLY? ARE YOU SURE?
LET'S GO IN AND SEE! I HEARD HIS VOICE!
I OPEN IT FOR TWO!
LET'S WAIT - HE'LL SAY IT AGAIN!
SAY IT AGAIN TO PLEASE PAPA!
FOR GOODNESS SAKE - AREN'T THEY EVER COMING BACK!
THE LITTLE DARLING - WE COULDN'T GET HIM TO SAY IT AGAIN!
HE DOESN'T LIKE TO BE COAXED!
I THINK YOU BETTER DEAL OVER!
HE SAID IT AGAIN!
I HEARD HIS VOICE TOO!
HURRY IN THERE - HE'LL SAY IT AGAIN!
YOUR SAY TO OPEN IT NEWLYWED!
SH-SH! DON'T SAY A WORD - HE'S THINKING ABOUT IT!
LOOK! HE'S GOING TO SAY IT!!
SAY IT - SNOOKUMS!
PLEASE SAY IT!
I WISH HE'D SAY IT SO WE COULD PLAY CARDS!
PLEASE - SNOOKIE!
AW! AREN'T YOU GOING TO SAY IT FOR PAPA?
DA!
WELL - ME FOR HOME - I CAN'T WAIT UNTIL THAT KID LEARNS TO TALK!!
10
WELL! BRING HIM IN AND WE'LL LET UNCLE KISS HIM GOOD NIGHT!
THE LITTLE DARLING IS SOUND ASLEEP!

Listen to Merry Harry Fox and Dancy Yancsi Dolly

Copyright, 1915, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

YANCSI—Harry, are we going to tell jokes this evening?

HARRY—Yes, if we can do it without being overheard. I think there's an eavesdropper lurking around here.

YANCSI—Who's that laying carpet over on the side of the stage there?

HARRY—Ah, an intruder. I'll see to it that he's removed. (To Albert), Say, old man I don't care how much you work around here as long as we're not busy with our act——

ALBERT—Your act? You haven't got any act. Who are you?

HARRY—Oh, you're one of these jokers, ain'tcha? One of these funny fellas, huh?

ALBERT—I'd like to be but it makes me sad to look at people like you.

HARRY—I suppose you're a stage hand. You must know a lotta jokes. Do yuh think yuh can tell me a few?

ALBERT—Mean ones?

HARRY—Now don't start that personal stuff. I know plenty jokes myself, see?

ALBERT—Well, why don'tcha tell 'em in yer act?

HARRY—Because I only tell 'em in the Winter to warm the audience up. This is my Summer act. That's why.

YANCSI—Go on Harry, tell him some of our jokes. Show him what we got. Go on.

HARRY—Now please don't interrupt me. Let me manage this person, let me——

YANCSI—No, go ahead and tell him that one about——

HARRY—Now, I told you to keep out of it, see? Don't let me hear any more——

YANCSI—If you don't tell him, I quit. I'm going home. Run your own act.

HARRY—All right, dear. Go ahead. You take fifty letterheads and I'll take fifty, and we'll divide everything else the same way, except what I paid for.

YANCSI—First ask him what he's doing with that carpet.

HARRY—I think the heat's upset him. Nobody'd lay a carpet on a day like this. Hey, Endurance!

ALBERT—Yes, sir,

HARRY—Will you kindly tell us why you're laying that carpet?

ALBERT—Why does a chicken lay an egg?

HARRY—Well, I don't see where that has anything to do with it, but of course the answer is very simple. A chicken simply lays an egg to go with ham. So we can have ham and eggs.

ALBERT—That's the reason I'm laying this carpet while you're out here.

HARRY—Oh. Now I'll tell you one. Yesterday I put on my bathing suit down at the beach and I went in. Do you follow me?

ALBERT—No, it's too deep for me.

HARRY—I see. You mean it's over your head. Well, put on some water wings and come along. I say, I put on my bathing suit and I went in for a duck. But I came out with a chicken.

ALBERT—Terrible. My joke showed you up to better disadvantage.

HARRY—Well, how's this one? Why is a mouse like a bale of hay?

ALBERT—That's an old one. 'Cause the cow'll eat it.

HARRY—No, Endurance, cows aren't eating mice this season. The answer it, 'Cause the cat'll eat it. I see where you lay carpets all your life.

ALBERT—Huh. So you're Harry Fox, huh?

HARRY—Yes, of the American stage. There are very few of us left.

ALBERT—Say, you get away with an awful lot of stuff out here.

HARRY—Well, gimme credit if I get away with it.

ALBERT—About all you do is come out and say "Success," and "Ma'am." You don't walk on a wire or jump through swords, or fall over chairs, like a lotta reg'lar actors.

HARRY—I know. You mean the fellas who fall off things and land on their nut. Loggerheads. Well, I don't have to do that to get across, do I?

ALBERT—Whoever said you got across?

HARRY—Now listen. You're workin' right back here where you hear all these jealous actors talk. A lotta people who've got nothin' and like to make people think nobody else has. But do they treat us that way? Now you're here in the wings where you hear all the stuff that gots around. Whatta these guys says about us, huh?

ALBERT—Well, I've been workin' here three years, and I'm always gotten along fine with everybody, and I don't wanta start anything.

Our Bureau of Misinformation

Peculiar Answers to Peculiar Questions

Copyright, 1915, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

TEMPERATURE, HUMIDITY, ET MELTERA.

SIR—What is the best thing to wrap around you when in a shower bath? M'DIST.

Absolute privacy.—Ed.

Misinformation Department: Sir—My wife is away at a Summer resort. What sort of a letter shall I write to her to convince her I am walking in the straight and narrow path? BEN E. DICK.

Dear Ben, you write like a has-been. Convincing one's wife of such a thing isn't being done any more. Write her that you are having a rest, that you drop in and have a few drinks and some cards with the boys, that you have seen all the new burlesque shows, and your wife will believe you and be happy. But if you write her that you are living the life of a saint, a paralytic, a deaf, dumb and blind man and a monk, all in one, she will come right home—and catch you. This is good advice; grab it.—Ed.

? Ed.—Is it hotter in the Summer than it is in Panama? Q. RUSS.

Either.—Ed.

Editor Question Col.—When it gets so hot and humid that you cannot possibly sleep, what do you do? PROSTRATED.

Stay awake and talk to myself about how much better I could manage the weather with one hand tied behind me.—Ed.

Mr. Editor—Will you not aid the great cause of temperance by agreeing with me that drinking so-called cooling drinks only serves to make one hotter? AQUA PURA.

Aqua, old girl, I will gladly aid your cause. I have heard that such is the case, but did it ever occur to you that when your mouth tastes like a baked woolen mitten it makes you two hundred times hotter when you can't get a good, long, cool drink?—Ed.

Question Editor—I don't see how you can write anything funny when it is so hot. ADMIRER.

In the first place, we do not. In the second place, we are glad you cannot see us trying, because you would then no longer be an admirer.—Ed.

My Dear Misinformation Editor—Can you help me? I bought a pair of bathing suit stockings, blue with red dots, and when I went into the water the blue and red came off and indelibly dyed my—the—er—cuticle. HORTENSE.

Well, well, Hortense, you have us going now. What sort of help do you want—advice or a sandpaper massage? And why did you go in the water? And, furthermore, if you hadn't written me about this no one would have known it. Or would they?—Ed.

Sir—When was the song, "In the Good Old Summer Time" written? FACTS.

In the dead of Winter.—Ed.

? ? ? ? ? ?—Can you quote me the best poem ever written on the weather, and who wrote it? LITTER RAYRIE.

"Man's a fool, man's a fool! When it's hot he wants it cool;
When it's cool he want's it hot, never happy with his lot!"

It was written by a "Man Who Knew."—Ed.

Dear Editor—Why is it we think so much more of ice in the Summer than in the Winter? WILLIE GUESSE.

For the same reason, Willie, that a monogamist thinks more of a wife than a Mormon.—Ed.

Editor Misinformation Bureau Department, City Life Section: My Dear Sir—What is the color of a thousand-dollar bill? O. G.

A pale, imaginary tint.—Ed.

Question Editor—What's the best way to take pictures? BILL M'SWIPE.

When no one is looking.—Ed.

Misinformation Editor—Years ago I planned to tour France, Belgium, Germany, Austria and Poland during the Summer of 1915. Please tell me, is it safe for me to do so? TRAVELER.

Sure it is, unless you were planning on coming back.—Ed.

Question Editor: Sir—Please tell me why in thunder women are wearing velvet hats now. GROUCH.

Are they? We haven't seen any. If you saw women wearing velvet hats they were very much out of style. Women were wearing next Winter's velvet hats last July. By this time the real stylish ones are wearing next Spring's hats.—Ed.

Sir—Do you happen to have about you now any good suggestions for quickly accumulating a big fortune? M. P. KUNEOUS.

Surest thing you know, old top: manufacture such a funny little car that every one will begin to tell stories about it.—Ed.

My Dear Sir—Will you please tell me why it is my husband won't eat anything I buy at a delicatessen store? MRS. L. A. ZEE.

Perhaps he is fond of food.—Ed.

Question Editor: Sir—In the interest of General-Interest statistics which I am compiling, will you tell me why more men stand at street crossings and stare at the women on rainy days than on dry, windy days? PROF. MARY BLINK.

And didn't you know the answer to that one, Mary? There's no dust to get in your eyes on rainy days.—Ed.

Misinformation Ed.—When will we be positively sure that woman is taking a deep personal interest in politics? WARDMAN.

When she is so anxious to vote that she won't stop to powder her nose.—Ed.

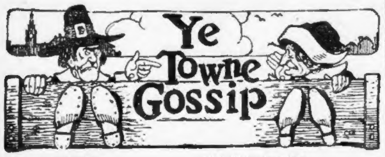
The Giggling Ceased.

A CLERGYMAN was once annoyed by people talking and giggling during the service. He paused, looked at the disturbers, and said: "Some years since, as I was preaching, a young man who sat before me was constantly laughing, talking and making uncouth grimaces. I paused and administered a severe rebuke. After the close of the services a gentleman said to me:

"'Sir, you made a great mistake; that young man is an idiot.'

"Since then I have always been afraid to reprove those who misbehave in chapel lest I should repeat that mistake and reprove another idiot."

During the rest of the services there was good order.



WILL SOMEBODY.

PLEASE TELL me.

WHY A perfectly good woman.

WHO IS sanitary.

AND WHO has a cat

AND WHO would never think.

OF TRYING to make them.

WILL SOMEBODY.

PLEASE TELL me.

WHY THIS woman.

WILL take perfectly good tomatoes.

WITH A lot of stuff.

THAT ALMOST chokes.

AND THEN look at you

AND SAY:

"YOU'RE NOT overlooking.

"THAT DELICIOUS salad?"

AND THEN.

WILL SOMEBODY tell me.

AND TRY to smile.

AND SAY:

"I CERTAINLY am not."

AND THEN.

AND SAY:

"YOU must get Mrs. Whatsername.

"TO GIVE you the recipe.

AND THEN eat it.

"OF ALL the rotten stuff.

"IT WAS that salad.

"OF MRS. Whatsername."

AND THEN go to bed.

OF THE long ago.

WOULD SET before him.

WITH PEPPER and salt.

AND SUGAR.

AND VINEGAR.

AND THANK Goodness.

THAT HE'D lived in an age.

WHEN THEY fed him things.

AND THE next night.

GO OUT again.

OF THE stuff.

AND SAY he liked it.

WHY DO they do it?

I ASK you.

I THANK you.

Mirandy on Matrimony and Money

"I lays dat I could live peaceable wid a man dat I didn't have to keep an eye on to see whedder he monkeyed wid his pay-envelope."

"WELL," says I de odder night when me an' my ole man, Ike, was a settin' aroun' real sociable togedder, wid de lamp a-castin' hit's glow over de family circle, an' little Teddy Roosterfelt a-playin' on de flo' betwixt, "well, I sees in de paper dat anodder one of dem millionaires is a-gettin' anodder divorsch."

"Humph," 'sclaims Ike, "de way de rich indulges deirselves in luxuries sholy am scandalous. Hit ain't no wonder dat hit makes folks dat has to wear deir ole clothes, an' stick to deir ole husbands an' wives, feel lak turnin' into one of dese heah anarchists, an' gettin' a boom an' goin' out an' bustin' up somethin'."

"I wonder why hit is," I pursues, "dat people dat has got money finds hit so hard to stay married to de same pusson, an' is always a-wantin' to swap partners? A po' man or woman manages to rock along pretty comfortable wid de same wife or husban' for forty or fifty yeahs. But de minute anybody gits money in de bank, dey gits kin' of restless in double harness, an' de next news you knows dey's done kicked over de traces.

"Cou'se I can see why de man whut was married to a woman who was a good cook, an' washer, an' patcher, an' dat could help him whilst he was po', feels lak dat he needs to git a pretty young wife dat's real stily an' dat looks lak she was born wearin' a pair of jay-bird heeled shoes instid of brogans, as soon as he strikes ile. He has to git a wife to match his new plush furniture, but de millionaires dat marries female millionaires don't pear lak dat dey is able to say hitched togedder no better dan de odders dat got married befo' dey knowed dat de Lawd was gwine to call 'em to be de head of a trust.

"Dat's de reason dat I say dat hit looks lak dat money is a marriage-buster. An' dat's curis an' curiser, for hit does seem as ef a couple dat didn't have no call to scrap over de grocery-bill an' de butcher-bill, suttinly would have de biggest bone of contention in de fambly skeleton removed from deir midst.

"My goodness," I goes on, a-castin' a meanin' glance at Ike, "I lays dat I could live as peaceable as a basket of kittens wid a man dat I didn't have to keep a eye on to see whedder he monkeyed wid his pay envelope on a Saturday night befo' he turned hit over to me, an' who I didn't 'spicion held out on me to pay for beer for a lot of low-down, lazy loafers dat he calls his friends."

"Yes, Lawd," spons Ike wid a groan, "dem folks whut's got plenty of money an' ain't got nothin' to worry 'em but a misfit wife or husban' is just gwine out of deir way to hunt for trouble. Me, ef I didn't have to worry over de rent, I wouldn't let a little thing lak bein' married to de wrong woman bodder me none."

"Dat's right," says I, "whut's missin' yo' affinity to missin' de bill-collector?"

"I tell you, Mirandy," says Ike, "why dese heah rich folks is always a-gittin' divorsches—hit's a pass de time away. A millionaire gits a house, or a horse, or a autimoble dat he gits tired of, an' he thinks dat he'll amuse hisself by gwine out an' tradin' hit off wid somebody else, but were ain't no excitement 'bout dat, becaze dere ain't no difficulties in de way. All dat he's got to do is to put his hands in his pocket an' pay de difference, an' dere he is wid anodder house, or horse, or autimoble dat he don't lak no better dan he did de fust one.

"Hit sholy does git on his nerves, an' make him peevish, ontel one day a good idee strikes him, an' dat is dat he'll trade off his wife for a new one, an' dat takes a lot of trouble, an' makes a lot of scandal, an' costs him a lot of alermony, an' hit's full of excitement, an' sort of gives him a run for his money, an' dat's why he does hit."

"Maybe so," spons I, "but whut makes de rich fall out of love wid each odder oftener dan de po' does?"

"Dey don't," says Ike, "but de difference is dat de po' is so busy wrastlin' wid de problem of how dey is gwine to git po'k chops for supper dat dey ain't got de time to notice whedder deir hearts palpitates at de approach of de one dat dey is tied to or not. But de rich ain't got nothin' to do but to set up an' hold deir fingers on deir pulses, an' watch de state of deir affections, an' see whedder dey's at fever heat, or is done drapped below normal.

"Now des take ourselves, Mirandy, I specs dot ef we was to go probin' aroun' we'd find out dat dere was 'bout forty-'leven different ways in which we didn't suit each odder, an' dat you didn't look to me lak one of dese heah Venuses, an' dat you warn't in no danger of mistakin' me for one of dem godlike young gentlemen in de ready-made clothin' advertisements.

"Mo'over, ef either one of us was to be tooken wid a thrillin' feelin' when we happened to look at de odder one we'd make sho' dat we'd done got malaria, an' we'd soak our feet in hot musta'd water, an' take a dose of quinine, an' go to bed.

"Maybe, too, each one of us is got a real soul-mate somewhar in de neighborhood, but bein' po' an' havin' to scuffle to make de ends meet, we ain't never had time to find none of dese things out. So we goes joggin' along togedder in peace, lak two good ole wuk-horses dat is fell into each odder's stride, an' pull togedder widout no bitin' nor kickin' nor jumpin'."

"Ef we was rich, I wouldn't look to you lak de noble hero dat stood wid his good right arm betwixt you and de po' house."

"Now ef we was rich, dis would all be different. When I'd come home of a night, I wouldn't be hongry, an' you wouldn't look to me lak you does, lak a angel wid a fryin'-pan in her han', an' surrounded by a halo of fried onions an' liver. No' I would see dat you was gittin' ole an' fat, an' I'd begin to think 'bout perambulatin' off after some slim young gal, dat was young enough to be my daughter.

"An' when you took a squint at me, I wouldn't look to you lak de noble hero dat stood wid his good right arm betwixt you an' de po' house. You would see dat I'se got hump-shouldered an' bandy-legged a-totin' a hod, an' layin' brick, an' you'd sort of prognosticate 'bout some young buck dat you'd seed dancin' on one toe at de skatin' rink.

"Den, havin' nothin' else to do, an' bein' sort of tired of odder amusements, we'd git to wonderin' why we ever married each odder, an' den some fine day we'd start out an' hunt up a lawyer an' a private detective, an' den we'd end up wid de odder millionaires in de divorsch co't."

"Amen," says I, "dat's God's truth. Ef married folks has got time to take stock of each odder's faults, an' remember how aggerfrettin' each odder is, hit's a wonder to me dat dey stays married at all."

In the Street of Forgotten Days

An Episode from George V. Hobart's Drama, "Experience," Now at the Shubert Theatre.

YOUTH, having left his sweetheart, Love, in "the land where dreams begin," starts out into the Big World with Ambition by his side. While Ambition is leading him to fame and fortune, they meet Beauty and Pleasure at the gates of the city. Here also Youth encounters Experience for the first time, Experience being shown as man's best friend and counsellor. Pleasure takes Youth to the Primrose Path, where he dances the tango and meets Intoxication and Passion. From there he goes to "The Corridors of Chance," wins thousands, and then loses all. With Experience he then comes into the Street of Remorse, then to the House of Lost Souls and finally to the Street of Forgotten Days.

THE NINTH EPISODE.

In the Street of Forgotten Days.

Description: A street showing the end of a church at right, with a stained glass window lighted up.

Discovered: Crime, walking into the scene, followed by Youth and Experience.

CRIME—Come on; it's only a block away. I'll have to beat that coke peddler over the head to get it.

(Just as they step within the light from the stained glass window of the church the organist plays a familiar hymn. Youth stops; Experience stops; Crime takes a step or two—stops.)

YOUTH—Listen! (They all listen to a few bars of the music.)

CRIME—Aw, come on!

YOUTH—Where are we?

EXPERIENCE—In the Street of Forgotten Days. (They are silent as the organist goes on.)

CRIME—Say, get a move on you!

YOUTH—Wait! Some good angel has come to me on the wings of that music. Through the mist in my mind I seem to see—— (To Experience) Help me—there's some one stretching out her hand to me.

EXPERIENCE—Your mother!

YOUTH—Yes, yes; my—my mother! (The music swells out.)

CRIME—Say! what's the matter with you? Come on!

YOUTH (to Crime)—Wait—please! (To Experience) Tell me—your vision is clearer than mine.

EXPERIENCE—Don't you remember the little church on that green-topped hill across the valley, and the woman whose voice was kindness itself——

YOUTH—My dear dead mother!

EXPERIENCE—How proudly she dressed you in your Sunday best and led you by the hand into the cool shadows of the church and bade you remember always the simple teachings you heard there together!

YOUTH—My mother—she comes to me now in the Street of Forgotten Days! (Just then from the church is heard the hymn)—

"Lead, Kindly Light,
Amid the encircling gloom—
Lead Thou me on;
The night is dark
And I am far from home—
Lead Thou me on!"

(Youth, with a gesture, commands Crime to leave him—then sinks sobbing on his knees beneath the church window. Crime slinks off at right.)

EXPERIENCE (after a pause, as the music dies away)—The miracle has come to pass. The never-dying miracle of a mother's love!

"WELL, Aunt Dinah," asked the cook's young mistress, "are you going to have the word 'obey' eliminated from the marriage ceremony?"

"No, chile, I ain't," said Aunt Dinah; "but I sho' am gwinter hab it done 'limited from de matrimony."

Would Depend.

SOME people get shot, some get shell. An actor and a retired army man were discussing the perils of their respective callings.

"How would you like to stand there with shells bursting round you?" the general demanded.

"Well, replied the other, "it all depends upon the age of the egg!"

Our Fashion Letter From Paris, Ky.

PARIS, Ky., Sept. 10.—Owing to the fact that the couturiers of France just at present are very busy designing the latest cuts in bandages and tourniquets, I thought it would be very hard for the City Life Section to get its regular Paris letter of Fall fashions, so I decided to send you one by wireless from Paris, Ky.

My travels along the boulevards of Paris, Ky., especially Rue de Moonshine, lead me to the discovery that hips are coming in again this Fall, and you simply must have hips if you expect to get anywhere—especially by walking. A woman won't be worth a hurrah who has not got a couple of hips. Hips come high, almost to the waist-line, but we must have 'em. If, furthermore, you have no hip you can't have anything on it.

The most prevailing colors in the Kentucky mountains the coming season are champagne, burnt brandy and wine color, and it goes without saying that there will be nothing doing on watered silks in this section.

By keeping one's ear to the ground, or if of the male persuasion, one's eye about six inches from the ground, we find that the ankle skirt is again to have the call, but we know some wives whose husbands will give them a call if they dare to wear them. By keeping close tabs on these ankle-length skirts it is easy to note that the shins of the mothers are visited on the daughters.

Fur will be much in vogue as a trimming, but I guess the nearest some folk will get to fur trimming on their skirts will be a furtive glance at the shop windows, unless the price of fur comes down. Everything seems to favor the enhanced figure for the coming season, which will be shown by the exaggerated figure in the dressmakers' bills.

As for men, last year's suits will be much worn by married men this Fall, and it will be very much de trop for a man to have more than one suit of clothes, which will be handy in a way, for then a man can't leave his keys in his other trousers and have to sit out on the front porch all night.

Well, anyway, as near as we can figure it out, the styles of women's dresses are getting more simple each season—that is, it's easier for men to see through 'em.

Timelock Foams, Great Detective

The Mystery of the Cracked Ceiling

WE were breakfasting quietly on kippered herring and Dundee marmalade in our diggings on Faker street.

Foams threw down the Times he had been glancing over.

"There are no criminals with brains in the world now, Potson. I am tempted to give up my little investigations and devote myself to onion growing. The official police, brainless though they are, can deal with the criminals of today. Nothing of interest in the paper today. 'Theft of the Crown Jewels from the Tower,' 'Murder of the Prime Minister,' 'Prince of Wales Kidnaped'—all the dull routine of commonplace, brainless crime. Faugh, it disgusts me."

Whang!

The great detective jumped clear out of his chair. It was the first time I had ever seen Foams show any sign of emotion.

A large piece of plaster had fallen from the ceiling and struck the table with a loud crack.

"This is Moriarity's work," exclaimed Foams in a trembling voice. "The arch-criminal almost got me that time."

"But, Foams——" I began.

"My dear Potson," said Foams, "you are a chump. You must have been asleep while I was out, and Moriarity thus was able to sneak into the room and loosen the plaster over the table, judging that the vibration of the kippered herring would bring it down on my head and remove the only living intellect that can cope with his."

"But Foams," I persisted, "see, there is water dripping through the ceiling."

"A proof of his fiendish ingenuity, my dear Potson. Moriarity undoubtedly moistened the plaster so that when it struck my head the thud would be deadened."

"But Foams," said I, "didn't you leave the water running in the bath when you tubbed this morning?"

"Potson, you are a chump," responded Foams. "The arch-criminal has deceived you. You lack the intellect necessary to see through his plans."

Suddenly the door burst open and in dashed the worthy Mrs. Muggins, from whom we rent our modest diggings.

Breathlessly she declared that we'd have to pay the damages caused by the water running over the bathtub.

I wonder if Foams was right about Moriarity?

The Little Foreigner's Request

SAY, boss, is you a newspaperman,
A war correspondent chap,
Wot goes to der front and writes breezy stuff
Full o' laughs and tears 'bout der scrap?
If yer are, will yer please do a favor fer me
When you're not where der shells break bad?
Will yer kindly look 'round der trenches a bit
An' try to locate our dad?

He left fer the war a long time ago,
An' we ain't heerd a word from him since.
I try to be brave an' pray fer him nights,
But when Ma starts a-cryin' I wince.
She jest sits around a-waitin' fer him,
A-mixin' a sigh with a weep,
An' even der baby she huddles up close,
Singin', "Dad's comin' soon; baby, sleep."

I'll never fergit der day dat he left
Dressed up in some fine soldier clothes;
He held us all tight an' kissed us good-bye,
Tears tricklin' 'longside of his nose.
He said, "I'll be back—God! let it be soon!"
But I'm thinkin' that God didn't hear,
'Cause many long months have now passed away,
Dad ain't come back yet, an' I fear——

But pshaw! What's der use; I know he ain't killed,
'Cause I look in der papers each day
At der pictures wot show der trenches an' fields
Where all der dead soldiers lay,
An' I ain't seen a picture wot looks like our dad,
So please, mister, try to find him
An' tell him to write, 'cause we're lonely at home,
An' Ma's heart's a-breakin' fer him.

An' tell him I'm bein' an awful good boy,
Jest as he wanted me to;
Dat der landlord was 'round fer der rent yest'day,
He says dat four months is now due,
An' tell him we ain't had much fer ter eat
Since he went to fight; but we'll strive

Ter fight all dese hardships if we'll git him back
Home again unmaimed an' alive.

How to Have Health and Muscles Like Mine — By Jess Willard.

An Exercise for Developing All the Leg Muscles and Making the Feet Flexible.

I NOW come to one of the most important articles of my series, which deals with the care and development of the feet, ankles and legs.

There is probably no part of the body that is so neglected as the feet. Why this is so is a mystery to me. This neglect brings misery that may become permanent, causes ill-temper and its consequent troubles. It is not a nice thing to have to say, but it is the truth that I have konwn people supposed to be refined and cultured who never thought of cleanliness as essential in this direction.

It is also true that there is no other part of the body that needs such constant attention as the feet. It must be remembered that they are seldom exposed to the air, that they are kept encased all day long and into the night in leather, and that they are kept working nearly every minute that their owner is awake.

There are three abominations in dress—corsets, stiff collars and tight shoes, and the greatest of these is tight shoes. Avoid patent leather as you would a person with smallpox. Don't choose shoes for appearance's sake, but for comfort. I don't have to tell you how much you will suffer if you disobey this advice, because nearly everybody has let vanity overcome their common sense in this direction, and has been forced to pay the penalty.

Would you believe that if everybody saw to it that their shoes gave their feet room enough to breathe—I mean that literally—there would be no corns, bunions or other foot troubles in the world? That is absolutely true. It is tight shoes that give the corn doctors their living. If everyone paid as much attention to their feet as they do to their face and hands the chiropodists would be mobbing poor houses trying to get in.

Here's another wrinkle for you. Always have two pairs of shoes. Don't throw away an old pair if they will stand resoling. I'll tell you why. You can get more rest, instantaneous rest, by changing from one pair of shoes to another after you come home from work in the evening than if you lay down and slept for an hour. To change your shoes is as invigorating as a cold shower. Don't believe me?—just try it to-night.

If you can afford it, change your socks or stockings every day. Change your shoes once a day. And last, but by no means least, keep your feet constantly clean. Because they are always covered up don't forget them. If you do they will remind you very soon by complaining in a way that you won't like. If the growing boy and girl takes this advice they will never have a corn or other foot complaint all their life. I'll promise that.

If you have been "breaking in" tight shoes all your life, and have been suffering accordingly, but you have resolved to take my advice, heed this exercise that I am going to tell you about. It is meant especially for those with feet that have become cramped from neglect until toes and instep are sore and tender.

My two pictures on this page to-day show a swaying exercise that will bring you foot health if you practise it daily. It consists simply of alternately going from tip-toe to resting on your heels. In the top picture I am on my toes, and at the bottom I have swayed back on my heels. Do this exercise twenty times the first week. Increase it ten times every week thereafter until you are doing it fifty times a day. You must away back and forth quickly or you will lose your balance.

Down in the left-hand corner of the page you will see a pretty girl illustrating one movement in a leg exercise that not only strengthens the leg muscles, but helps to keep the hips to their proper proportions. It consists of standing with feet close together holding a stick, as she is doing, with both hands. First raise one leg and clasp the stick over it, as the picture shows you. Hold your balance for a few seconds, pulling on the stick hard. Then let your leg down, and do the same thing with your other one. Keep this up until you feel you are getting tired, then stop.

The other exercise illustrated at the top of the page is one of the hardest known to physical culture, although it seems absurdly easy to read about. It is so hard and such a strain that I don't advise the beginner to practise it more than once for each leg each day during the first week. Then twice daily for the second week. After that as many times as you like until you feel yourself getting tired. Heed my words on this or your legs will ache like they never ached before.

Do not use a piano stool, as the girl in the picture is using, unless it has been screwed down tightly and you are wearing rubber-soled or gymnasium shoes, or you are liable to slip off and hurt yourself. The kitchen chair with its wooden seat is best, as you have to bear your whole weight on it.

Careful attention is needed on the part of the reader or this exercise will not produce the results intended. The girl in the picture illustrates the starting position for the exercise, so I don't have to describe that. The next movement consists in raising yourself off the floor with the strength of the leg that is resting on the chair. The other leg must be kept rigid and the foot flat. You must not give the slightest spring upward, but must force the leg on the chair to do all the work. If you spring up the slightest little bit the exercise amounts to nothing.

After you have done this once with both legs you will find yourself all out of breath and perspiring freely unless you have exceptionally strong leg muscles. I have seen men with powerful arms and shoulders groan and stretch trying to do this exercise, which on the face of it looks so simple. If you find it hard to keep your balance stretch your arms out in front of you while rising instead of holding them as the model has hers.

I am in receipt of a letter from a young man who asks me not to use his name, which reads in part, as follows:

"I want to stop smoking cigarettes. In fact, I want to stop smoking altogether, but every time I try I get so irritable that my friends call me a crank. I know I do get cranky and nervous, but as soon as I start to smoke again I am all right. My mother wants me to give up the habit, and to please her I would like to, but I don't seem able to do it. Do you know of any cure?"

I found this a hard letter to answer for the reason that I have never been a smoker myself, and, therefore, have never experienced the craving that goes with it. For the benefit of this young man, however, I inquired among some of my friends, whom I knew had sworn off smoking and I was able to learn how they did it.

One man I know for a time chewed gum, which I don't approve of, but which is, neverthelss, not as harmful as cigarettes. Another carried a little bag of lemon drops around with him and every time he felt like a smoke he would take a lemon drop. After a while, he told me, he found he could do without either smoking or lemon drops.

That sounded like a first-rate scheme. I like lemon drops myself and I never heard of them doing anybody any harm. So I would advise my young friend to try the lemon drop cure for a white, or the chewing gum if he prefers it, although I think one of the ugliest sights in the world is to see a lot of boys or girls working their jaws like a lot of monkeys eating peanuts.

I have received letters from both boys and girls asking me what I consider the proper amount of sleep for the average person. If you figure on eight hours, Winter and Summer, you will have nothing to worry about, but some of my inquirers want to know if it isn't true that a person should sleep more in the Winter and less in the Summer.

Perhaps if they follow the rule that I apply to myself it will suit them, for I sleep nine hours in the Winter and about seven in the Summer. Try it if you wish, but my advice is to take eight hours all the year round. I have found that the programme I have laid out for myself seems to suit me, but it might not suit everybody else, while a uniform stretch of eight hours cannot be anything but correct. It is my opinion that too much sleep is harmful, but not as harmful as too little sleep. Too much sleep makes you lazy and weakens the body, but too little sleep is liable to bring on all kinds of troubles. The nerves suffer first, and if it is carried to extremes may bring on a nervous brain affection.

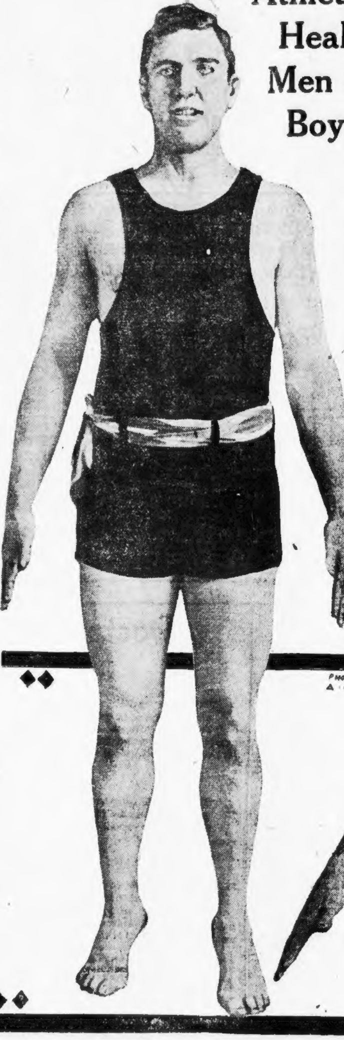
I have also been asked questions concerning the food to eat and the number of meals a day. I must refuse to make any set rules. I think that if persons are physically healthy they can and should eat anything they want to. Restricting oneself to a diet is never necessary, I have found, unless some physical ailment has to be considered. For instance, rheumatic people may benefit themselves by leaving meat out of their daily diet, but I am not a vegetarian and I do not believe that a strictly vegetable diet is good for everybody.

I have no less an authority than Dr. Sargent to back me up in this. Dr. Sargent told me that he personally tried the vegetarian diet for a year, and while he gained in weight he appeared to lose a certain amount of vim and energy. A man ought to figure it out for himself. If certain foods disagree with you, cut them out.

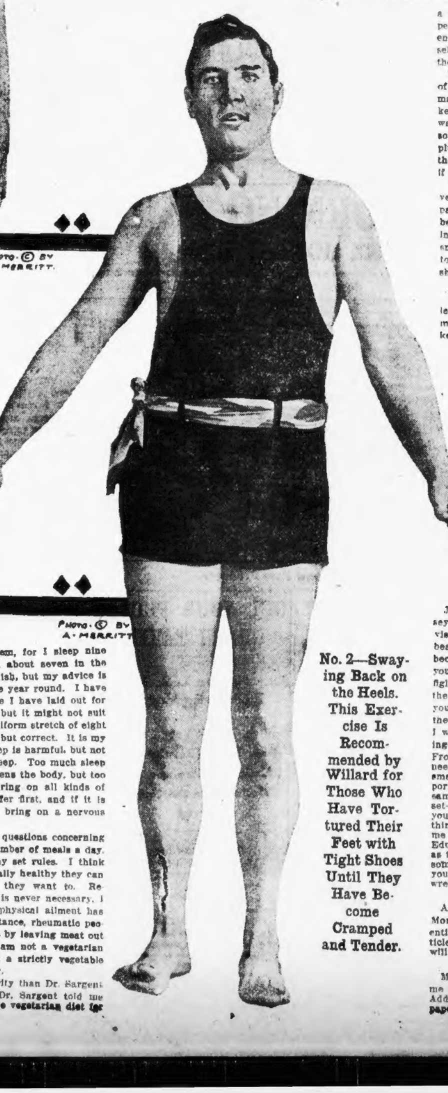
Before ending this article I want to tell you of the value of the hot foot bath. There are many "remedies" for tender feet on the market, but nothing is better than a foot bath of water as hot as the feet can stand it. After soaking them for fifteen or twenty minutes plunge them into cold water and then dry thoroughly. You will bless me for this advice if you have been a sufferer.

Patent leather shoes worn all the time are very bad for you, and I would rather wear a pair of very stout water-tight shoes than rubbers. In fact, I never wore a pair of rubbers in my life, and I never get my feet wet when snow is on the ground. So next time you go to the shoe shop get a comfortable pair of shoes or go somewhere else.

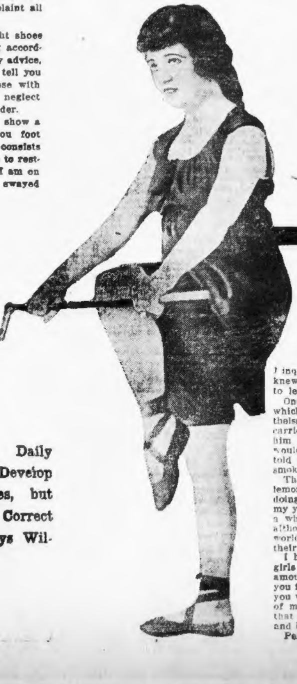
Next week Willard continues his advice on leg exercises, showing his readers some novel methods for strengthening the lower limbs and keeping the hips to correct proportions.



No. 1—Rising on the Toes.



No. 2—Swaying Back on the Heels. This Exercise Is Recommended by Willard for Those Who Have Tortured Their Feet with Tight Shoes Until They Have Become Cramped and Tender.



"Practising This Daily Will Not Only Develop the Leg Muscles, but Keep the Hips to Correct Proportions," Says Willard.

Letters From Willard Readers

FRED MARTIN, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Do all the trapeze work you can for the coming year, do not smoke or drink, and get plenty of sleep. Exercise with dumbbells and pulleys and keep yourself in the best of trim. In one year you will have attained your full height, and you can hope for no more, but by living a clean, healthy life for the next year you will aid nature.

JOSEPH DI NUNCIE, Newark avenue, Jersey City, N. J.—In the first place I would advise you to put your mind on something else besides prize-fighting. You say you want to become a boxer, but your letter signifies that you want to go into the ring to become a prize-fighter, which is very different. You are at the age now where what you do will control your whole life. Take my advice and cut out the idea of entering the ring. Aside from that I would say that you will need a lot of training to ever be fit in the way that you desire. From your measurements you are greatly in need of chest exercise. Your expansion is too small. Your arms do not show the proper proportions, the biceps and forearms being the same. I imagine you look like a stocky, well-set-up young fellow, and you probably think you would make a great fighter, but I don't think so. Your letter and its spelling show me that you have neglected your education. Education of the mind is fully as important as training the body. Why don't you try to be something worth while instead of throwing your whole life away in a game that has wrecked hundreds of fine young fellows?

ALDEN SMITH and MARSHALL McCLUNG, Monsey, N. Y.—Read my two articles devoted entirely to running, and also my swimming article, all three of which have appeared. They will give you the information you want.

MISS VERA WALKER, Ottumwa, Ia.—Send me some of your pictures in athletic costume. Address me in care of the editor of this newspaper.

DRAMA and AMUSEMENTS

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

A new farce comedy bearing the title "She's in Again" is slated to open the Hollis tomorrow night. The piece is produced by Ned Wayburn, the celebrated stage manager, who has finally embarked as a theatrical magnate, and who is also opening the Century Opera House in New York this week as a continental music hall.

"She's in Again" is adapted from a very amusing farce comedy which ran for a whole season in Paris before the war began and was called "My Aunt from Monfleur." I understand that it has been very liberally adapted; in fact, almost rewritten, but it remains nearly as daring as the original.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

This war will be responsible for many a drama, but probably none of such a quiet character as "The White Feather" at the Plymouth. A war play usually needs a big canvas. It carries spectacular features, armies, uniforms, a whole stage full of sound producing instruments to represent the battle just around the corner of the wings.

"The White Feather" is really a detective play. War is in the background, of course, and a uniform or two appears during the course of the action. But all three acts occur in a quiet boarding house sitting room, there is no battle save of wits and only one shot is fired and that off stage. Lots of people wonder why the piece doesn't give more offence to Germans since it deals with their spy system.

It is a fact that the Germans are proud of their spy system and glory in its efficiency. As the spies in "The White Feather" who are working to destroy the English fleet are all actuated by the purest and most patriotic motives, there is no occasion for resentment and none is shown.

"Experience" seems to be getting more endorsements than a patent medicine. First, the clergymen, then mayors, governors and other political luminaries, and next operatic brilliants like Geraldine Farrar all unite in pronouncing it a good show.

The attendance at the Shubert during the past week has been phenomenal considering the weather conditions, and it looks as though this "morality play with a punch" were firmly established for a long time to come.

George V. Hobart and George Bernard Shaw's ideas on morality, like everything else, are very different. Take Doolittle the Dustman in "Pygmalion," and compare his views on middle-class morality with those of Hobart. "Experience" is middle-class morality. It is the time-honored theory that he who violates the code in which most of us believe will be punished as certainly as that the sun will rise every morning.

Shaw, being a cynic, doesn't think so, and only a small portion of those who see his plays are ever able to discover what he does think about anything. Anyway, it is a great satisfaction to those who refrain from wine, women and song to go to the Shubert and see what happens to those who are indulgent.

"Eva Tanguay is the only woman in the world, so far as is known, who ever made a dress out of United States coins," announces her press agent. She is also the only woman in the world who ever played tag with the United Booking Office, and got away with it.

She was announced for last week at Keith's, and they were compelled to cancel her. Then she was announced for next week, and then cancelled, and then she decided to come and is on again.

Eva is full of temperament. It is all right for an opera singer to terrorize her manager, because he expects her to have temperament and lets her get away with it. But vaudeville managers are business men, and if an artist doesn't do just what is suggested by the manager the artist loses his honorable job.

Therefore Eva deserves lots more credit for getting away with her temperament than Farrar, Melba or Tetrazzini.

The vitality of "The Girl from Utah" is amazing. Few English musical comedies stretch into a second season. The three stars were much baffled one night last week, when for the first time since they gave it their moving picture imitation didn't get a laugh.

A drop with a hole in it the size of a motion picture comes down in the last act. The hole is covered with gauze so that the actors will appear filmy. As the drop came down the gauze curtain caught on something and ripped with a sound like a fat man tearing off his collar on a hot day.

The actors all unconscious came into the picture and began to work. The audience fixed its eyes upon the rip and watched it widen. Cawthorne, Sanderson and Brian worked harder and harder, but never a laugh. The audience was breathlessly watching the accident. The scene concluded without much attention being paid to it, and it wasn't until the actors saw the stage manager tearing out his hair and the stage hands struggling to remove the ruined drop that they realized why they hadn't got over as usual.

John Brown, business manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ben Stern, the producer, were in Boston last week in connection with the Diaghilew Imperial Russian Ballet, which is the big European dance combination, headed by Nijinsky and Karsavina, brought over here by the Metropolitan for a brief tour.

The Metropolitan Opera found it hard sledding last Winter, like every other opera organization, and this year cuts its New York season from twenty-three week to nineteen. The subscription season will be twenty-three weeks, as usual, but the last four will be devoted to the big ballet, while the opera company goes a-touring. Three out of the four weeks of the opera tour, however, will be spent in Boston.

In the meantime, the ballet will visit fifteen cities before it enters the Metropolitan Opera, and will spend either one or two weeks in Boston at the Opera House.

I had the opportunity to see this particular ballet combination at Monte Carlo and in Paris before the war broke out, and I think it very probable that it will repeat the sensation in America it has always created abroad.

A striking example of virtue of keeping faith with the public is shown by the experience of the Tremont Temple Concert Course. This popular institution is entering upon its fourth season. Although no announcement has been made as yet of the plans for the season, such is the confidence of the patrons that they will be something worth while that mail orders and personal visits to Tremont Temple are responsible for more than 400 course tickets already applied for and orders coming in at the rate of scores every day.

Although the complete roster for the coming season is not ready yet, it is a fact that Alice Nielsen will be heard in the regular course, and Evelyn Scotney, Michael J. Dwyer, Attilio di Crescenzo, Rodolfo Fornari, Howard White, Arthur Hackett, Tadeo Wronski, the Polish basso, are among the singers engaged with several big artists still to come, while among the instrumentalists are Heinrich Gebhardt, the celebrated pianist; Irma Seydel, the sensational girl violinist, and Ralph Smalley, the well-known 'cellist.

Boston's Temple of Music, the Opera House, will open for the season next week under the Shubert direction with the San Carlo Opera Company, said to be the best two dollar opera organization in the country. Impresario Galli toured the country with success last season when the Chicago, Boston and Century opera companies were compelled to suspend.

The name San Carlo has special significance here, as it was used by the organization brought to the Park Theatre about nine years ago by Henry Russell, in which Nielsen, De Reyne, Constantino, Riccardo Martin, Di Segurola and other celebrated singers were enrolled. It was enlarged by Russell two years later and played the Majestic. The following year it developed into the Boston Opera Company.

Galli's troupe contains some excellent singers, I am informed, and satisfactory ensembles are given. The Shuberts have booked several big melodramas into the Opera House, and there is even talk of sending the Winter Garden shows up there. The trend of business and amusements is toward the Back Bay, and it would not be surprising if the Opera House were Boston's most successful playhouse in another season.

"The Song of Songs" has successfully gotten by the censors, and Boston will be privileged to see the wonderful acting of Irene Fenwick and the other members of the company for two weeks more. I do not admire the sort of play "The Song of Songs" represents, and I think Sheldon might use his talent better than painting such pictures as the gradual degrading of Lily Kardos. But if such plays are going to be permitted, it is indeed a privilege to see the way Miss Fenwick plays this part, which is one of the most wonderful female parts written in many years.

John Craig reopened his Castle Square during the hottest week of the season, but they say that "Common Clay" demonstrated again its amazing drawing powers. There are people in Boston who have seen the play five or six times, so great is its popular appeal.

ATTRACTIONS AT THE THEATRES

Hollis Street Theatre.

The opening production of the season at the Hollis Street Theatre tomorrow evening will be the Ned Wayburn, Inc., presentation of Thomas J. Gray's three-act farce, "She's in Again."

It comes direct from the Gaiety Theatre, New York, where it enjoyed a long spring and early summer season. The cast is headed by Ada Lewis, who created a sensation in the character of the Aunt from Flatbush in the premiere of the farce. Other artists who were in the New York production and who will be seen in the support of Miss Lewis are: Clarence Oliver, Edwin Nicander, Ann Warrington, Mae Hopkins, George A. Schiller, Sarah McVicker, Grace Bryan Mahdah Weems, John Gray and George E. Riddell.

Three acts and three scenes with the locale moved from New York city to Lakewood make up the complete stage settings. Aubrey Brighton's apartments in New York, with Clarence Oliver playing the role of Aubrey, opens the rip roaring laughs of "She's In Again," and the living room and guests' suite in the Tarltons' home at Lakewood, N. J., are the final scenes of activity.

Did you ever have any one arrive unexpectedly? Turn up at the wrong time and get you in trouble? Sure you did—you thought you had something to do—but imagine having an aunt turn up while you had someone in your apartment who insisted upon forcing her attentions on you. You don't want your aunt to know it, and to get away from this you go out of town, only to be followed by the same person—your aunt—and someone else who said she was married to you—some trouble, eh, what? Well, Aubrey Brighton, the hero of "She's In Again," has all this trouble and a whole lot more. There's a girl in a bath tub, too—a regular girl—and a regular tub. But why tell you any more about it? We don't want to spread it around. Comical shows are scarce but here's one that's funny.

Castle Square Theatre.

A Charming love story, set in the circumstances and amid the prejudices of rural life, is the theme of "He fell in Love with His Wife," the play which will open at the Castle Square Theatre. The piece is a dramatization of a famous novel by E. P. Roe, who was the favorite writer of this country twenty years ago.

"He Fell in Love with His Wife" tells the story of James Holcraft, a wealthy farmer who lives in the little village of Oakville. He is a widower, who has vowed to keep the memory of his wife sacred, and believes that he will never marry again.

Alida Armstrong comes to live in the village and immediately finds her position uncomfortable. She has suffered from deceit, has been wronged by a mock marriage, and though herself perfectly innocent, is made to feel uncomfortable and is practically sent to Coventry by the narrow-minded townspeople.

Holcroft marries her and makes her his housekeeper, from motives of chivalry. Chivalry makes him refrain from speaking of love to her, though he is soon aware of his own feelings. How he avenges her honor and how finally his love triumphs make an absorbing story.

William P. Carleton will play the role of James Holcroft in this piece, and Betty Barnicoat will have the part of Alida. Theodore Friebus, Donald Meek, Mrs. Vida Croly Sidney and Justine Adams will all be in the cast.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Eva Tanguay, the world's greatest box office attraction, and known the country over as "The Madcap Genius of Mirth and Song," will appear for one week only. Miss Tanguay comes to Boston from the greatest triumph of her career in New York City, where her new songs, new costumes, and new eccentricities have created as great a furore as in the early days of her remarkable leap into fame and the limelight. All of Miss Tanguay's songs are new this season. Several of them were written by herself. Craig Campbell, Scotland's own tenor, late leading man with Emma Trentini in "The Firefly" and other big musical successes, will make his vaudeville debut, offering a series of Scotch ballads and old Irish songs. Mr. Josef Martin, the celebrated pianist, will accompany Mr. Campbell. Harry Girard and his company in the spectacular Alaskan musical comedy, "The Luck of a Totem," with a big cast of singers, dancers and actors, including Mr. Girard as "The Sheriff," will be another feature. Other features will include Edwina Barry, the popular young South Boston comedienne, assisted by William Richards and company in the merry farce comedy, "The Home Breaker;" Jack Corcoran and Tom Dingle, late of George M. Cohan's "Hello, Broadway," in a series of eccentric character dancers; Tower and Darrell, Jack McLellan and May Carson, Helene and Emilion, etc.

Gus Hill's "Midnight Maidens."

At the Gaiety next week Gus Hill will offer for the approval of burlesque patrons, The Midnight Maidens, in a hilariously funny travesty entitled, "Casey & Duffy." The cast, which is a very exceptional one, includes Mr. Ross Snow, probably the most finished actor to adopt burlesque as a field for his talents. Equally as well known and talented is Mr. Pete Curley, whose Tad character is known to every lover of good burlesque. Miss Rose Kessner, undoubtedly the best eccentric dancer now before the public. Miss Patsy Hunt, prima donna; Arnou and Mayer, specialty dancers and singers; The Astor Quartet, and Jolly Johnny Larkins, one of the funniest colored comedians in the world, not forgetting the famous Midnight Maidens' chorus of languishingly beautiful girls of no uncertain age.

The performance was designed for laughing purposes exclusively, well seasoned with catchy, whistleable music, entrancing dances and the frolics of pretty girls. This is the essence of real burlesque. Mr. Hill promises his patrons a thoroughly enjoyable performance and entertainment unequalled by any to appear at the Gaiety this season.

Waldron's Casino.

This week at Waldron's comes the big show, Joe Hurtig, who presents Frank A. Burt and his merry troop in "The Girl Trust." The show is what the name indicates, a girl trust, and Hurtig claims to have all the good lookers in burlesque. There are thirty lively misses in the chorus, a gingery bunch who can sing. Burt is one of the funniest men in burlesque, and the other principals are top notchers.

Loew's St. James.

An all star show will be presented at Loew's St. James Theatre the first three days of the coming week, headed by Helene Carrell, Francis Pierlot Co. in the screaming farce comedy, "I Died," by Jules Simonson. Others on this bill will include the musical comedy star, Janet Adair, in character songs, assisted by Miss Adolphi at the piano; Adele Morrow, in a repertoire of new songs, direct from triumphant tour of the West; Henry Frey, the German souse, in new songs and stories, Les Alex Carsangets, in delightful dance divertisments. Other acts will be shown.

The bill the last half of the week will be topped by the Colonial Quintette, with Countess Rose Ernest and company in vaudeville's most artistic, musical, singing offering.

Globe.

The show for the first three days of the coming week at Loew's Globe Theatre will be headed by the popular stars, Emily Darrell and Charley Conway, presenting something new and unique in vaudeville. Others on the bill will include "When It Strikes Home," a clever comedy playlet, by Richard Warner; Danny Simmons, the military hobo, in a tramp and Scotch monologue; Von Hampton & Shriner, favorite nut comedians; Edgar Berger, the college boy equilibrist, and many others.

The bill for the last half of the week will include Helen Carrel, Pierlot & Co., in the screaming farce

COMING EVENTS

Perhaps the most talked about play produced in the last twenty-five years is "On Trial," which Cohan & Harris' specially organized company are to present here at the Tremont Theatre on September 27.

"On trial" is a melodrama, but it is said to be so well acted that one forgets the obviousness of the plot. One of its remarkable effects is the lightning-like rapidity in which its numerous scenes are manipulated as the episodes of the play develop.

The famous "Ziegfeld Follies" of the current year's vintage is to be exhibited at the Colonial Theatre for a brief engagement, commencing next Monday evening. The work this season, which is heralded as the best of the entire series, is by Rennold Wolf, Channing Pollock and Gene Buck. Louis Hirsch and Dave Semper composed the music. Joseph Urban, the noted scenic artist of Boston and Swampscott, executed the scenery, which is said to eclipse any stage pictures ever presented. The big cast is made up of such popular entertainers as Ina Claire, Anna Pennington, Mae Murray, Lucille Cavanaugh, Helen Rook, Justine Johnstone, Kay Laurell, the Oakland Sisters, Gladys Feldman, Leon Errol, Ed Wynn, Will West, W. C. Fields, Charles Purcell, Hubert Wilke, George White, Carl Randall, Phil Dwyer and Bert Williams. In addition to the principals mentioned, Mr. Ziegfeld is bringing to Boston the original New Amsterdam Theatre New York beauty chorus, numbering over 100.

FOOTLIGHT FLASHES

AFTER many weeks of preparation, "Ned Wayburn's Town Topics" will have its first presentation at the Century, Central Park West, Sixty-second and Sixty-third street, New York city, Thursday night, September 16. Ned Wayburn's Productions, Inc., recently took possession of this magnificent playhouse, and since that time the company of over 150 principals and chorus, and 200 supernumeraries, have been rehearsing there. Now Mr. Wayburn believes that the huge entertainment, which he call "a musical fun-show," is ready for its debut.

THOMAS A. WISE is one of the heavyweight comedians who have won popularity on the American stage. The avoirdupois actors include Maclyn Arbuckle, Frank J. McIntyre, Taylor Holmes, Herbert Corthell and others equally well known, so that there is no truth in the quotation that "nobody likes a fat man," so far as the playgoing public is concerned.

GEORGE A. SCHILLER of "She's in Again" at the Hollis Street Theatre, is as good a dancer as he is a comedian. His umbrella dance in "The Passing Show" was the leading feature of that revue, which was the first specimen of that Parisian style of entertainment seen on the American stage. It was first presented at the New York Casino and afterwards came to the Columbia in this city, with Madge Lessing, Vernona Jarbeau, Lucy Daly, John Henslow, May Ten Brook, Charles J. Ross and Mabel Fenton.

"HE COMES UP SMILING," a farce comedy in which Douglas Fairbanks appeared in New York last season, but which closed because of poor business, has been put out again. It has had a chorus injected into it and half a dozen songs, and Bernard Granville heads the cast. It was a bright little farce and didn't deserve its fate in New York.

MILO, the model who appeared at Coney Island all Summer, and whose measurements were supposed to denote the perfect woman, and who had been engaged for Ned Wayburn's "Town "Topics" at the Century, in New York, has gone and got married. She has married a gent named Rigsby, who is taking her to Harrisburg, Pa., to live. How she must have loved him.

GEORGE COHAN has written three plays for production this season. The first is "Hit the Trail Holliday," in which Fred Niblo, his brother-in-law, will star. This was produced last Monday. He has a new play for Hitchcock and one for Chauncey Olcott. Lots of dramatists would like to be like Cohan. Write a play, and not see any manager, just go-ahead and produce it.

WILLIAM INGERSOLL, who gives such a fine portrayal of the difficult role of wise old Experience in the play of that name at the Shubert Theatre, is a graduate of the old Boston Museum. "I began my theatrical work as a super at the old Boston Museum," said Mr. Ingersoll last week at the Shubert. "This was in 1882, when I had just finished my school days in Boston. I was a super all that season, and the following year, in 1883, was engaged as a regular member of the company. I resigned in February, 1884, to join the Boston Theatre production of 'The Silver King.' As the poet says, 'Them was the good old days.'

MARK A. LUESCHER of the firm of Werba and Luescher, producers, has gone to work for Dillingham and will handle the Chicago engagement of Montgomery and Stone in "Chin Chin,' as well as their tour. The producing firm of Werba and Luescher put out "The Spring Maid," "Sweethearts" and numerous other pieces. Last season they handled "Cabiria," the D'Annunzio film.

JOHN HENRY MEARS, theatrical manager, well known in this city from his visits with John Drew and other stars, intends to branch out on his own with a revival of "The Silver King." Mears, in addition to being a theatrical manager, is an expert tangoist. When he was here two years ago he eked out his income giving dancing lessons at the Copley Plaza.

FANNIE WARD, the actress, who has a house in London and thinks herself almost an Englishwoman, was booked to sail on the St. Paul the other week, but when she turned up didn't have a passport. As nobody can get into England without proper credentials, nowadays, and as it takes several days to get a passport, Miss Ward had to postpone her trip for a week.

FREDERICK ARTHUR COLLINS, a member of the cast of "Experience," is the youngest son of Miriam O'Leary Collins, of the old Boston Museum Stock Company. He has taken the stage name of Frederick Arllene, because he wants to make a reputation on his own account. His sister, Miriam Collins, is already upon the boards, and will be leading woman for William Hodge this season in "The Road to Happiness."

THE latest wrinkle in motion pictures is the move of the Triangle Film Company, which is arranging a series of loges at the Knickerbocker Theatre in New York to cost $2.00 a seat. The tony occupants won't even use the ordinary theatre entrance, where they might mingle with the common folks coming down from the balconies.

PLAYS THAT REMAIN IN TOWN

Wilbur Theatre.

"Nobody Home" at the Wilbur Theatre, where it will start its fourth successful week tomorrow night, is well known as the most delightfully popular musical comedy Boston has seen in many seasons.

Park Square Theatre.

"Twin Beds," Selwyn & Co's big laugh festival, which is on the eve of its third week at the Park Square Theatre, has caught on with such big favor that it is bound to repeat its great New York success, where it achieved the notable record of fifty-two consecutive weeks.

Plymouth Theatre.

"An exciting war play" is the manner in which a prominent Boston critic characterized "The White Feather," the thrilling melodrama now about to begin the second week of its engagement at the Plymouth Theatre. Another said that it was the logical successor to "Secret Service." These and other highly commendable expressions by both press and public furnish sufficient proof that the piece is all that the authors intended it to be.

Tremont Theatre.

In spite of the emphatic success of the "Song of Songs" the original three weeks' booking must stand, and the final performance given Saturday, September 25. "The Song of Songs" tells a story that will be material for discussion long after the play has departed from this city. It is told in that direct, vivid and even startling style which has made its author, Edward Sheldon, famous.

Colonial Theatre.

"The Girl from Utah," in which Julia Sanderson, Donald Brian and Joseph Cawthorn began a return engagement at the Colonial Theatre last Monday, will continue to be the attraction at that house for this week. And it is announced that this will be positively the last chance given Boston theatregoers to see the famous three-star combination in this popular play.

Plymouth Trip.

So many requests have reached Mr. F. L. Lane, general manager of the Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company, for a continuance of the Plymouth trip, that Mr. Lane has consented to run the steamer Betty Alden one more time this season. The Betty Alden will leave Rowe's Wharf this morning at 10 o'clock. It is reported that this will be one of the largest trips of the season for those who have not already taken advantage of this all-day sail will be sure to enjoy this outing.

Provincetown Trips.

The season of all-day, deep-sea trips to Provincetown on the big iron steamship Dorothy Bradford, of the Cape Cod Line, has been extended and the final trip will be made one week from tomorrow, Sept. 20, instead of tomorrow, as previously announced. This extension of the season's time was necessary to accommodate excursionists.

Footlight Flashes

ELEANOR PAINTER, who was the prima donna of the "Lilac Domino" in Boston, will head the cast of John Cort's production of "Princess Pat," the new Herbert operetta. Sam Hardy and Alexander Clark are in the cast.

The latest George Cohan show is "Hit the Trail Holiday," which is to be put out by Fred Niblo and Company. The title role is that of a reformed bartender who has turned evangelist. George M. may be presumed to have read about Billy Sunday before he sat down to write this play.

EDDIE CORT, son of John Cort, who managed the Cort Theatre in Boston for two seasons, will be located in New York this year. He will manage the York Theatre, which will have the policy so successful at the Standard, playing Broadway hits at popular prices.

* * *

GABY DESLYS was present at a big recruiting meeting in London a few nights ago and offered to give a signed photo of herself and a kiss to every recruit. Many British youths took advantage of the offer and Gaby's lips got chapped.

By HARLOW HARE

The [illegible] practically [illegible] of a year ago seems now firm [illegible] house the manager [illegible].

Not [illegible] through a dull or uninteresting five or six reels is a depressing experience. Most poor features [illegible] would make a good [illegible].

In [illegible] and so rapidly do pictures [illegible] on Thursday, and [illegible] criticism it on Sunday.

Not long ago I dropped into a theatre which makes a specialty of features [illegible] good [illegible]. The picture carried a good story, but the story was [illegible] a mass of detail and unnecessary p[illegible].

In the early days of pictures when the public still was impressed by the wonders of [illegible] no detail was too small or unimportant to show.

But nowadays when a big story is to be told it is nothing less than idiotic to fill up with small stuff. For example, a man is called by phone to visit a young [illegible]. He goes to the [illegible] the message. Then he puts on his coat, takes his hat [illegible] his auto; they [illegible] several times. They show him getting out, climbing the [illegible] the bell, giving his card to the [illegible] and being shown into the library.

All this is absolutely unnecessary. Between the summons to the phone and the appearance at the girl's house [illegible]. Nobody cares [illegible].

[illegible] pictures are full of junk like this. They detract from the interest. [illegible] and [illegible] them from a novelist and you don't like them in a motion picture. A few directors realize this and cut detail down to the bone. Most of them go right along in the old fashioned way.

There is one thing certain about the [illegible] picture. It will have to be improved or it will have to give way to something else.

Rosa Rentz Troupe celebrated [illegible] reel Mutual [illegible] Man.

Exeter Street Theatre.

After [illegible] for extensive alterations which render the Exeter one of the [illegible] theatres in the city [illegible] Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Mary Pickford [illegible] appears [illegible] one of her [illegible] characterizations [illegible] which the most likable traits of Mary [illegible] theatre during the [illegible] season.

MISS KEVAL CAN NOT RESIST THE CALL OF THE STAGE

Actress in "The White Feather" Could Make Her Way as a Singer.

[illegible] Keval, one of the principal [illegible] of "The White Feather" company playing at the Plymouth Theatre, began her stage career when [illegible] years old with a German opera company in Canada.

Miss Keval, who is thoroughly [illegible], having been born in Manchester, England, is an accomplished [illegible] and possesses a soprano [illegible] of wide range. In fact Miss Keval has spent several years in [illegible], her recent appearance in that field being with Sam [illegible] in "All for the Ladies." But [illegible] to the little lady the [illegible] has lost its charm; at least [illegible] present.

"I have given up my entire love [illegible]," said Miss Keval [illegible] the other day in her dressing [illegible] ambitions are not [illegible]. I cannot resist the [illegible] and for that reason [illegible] career. There [illegible] to be gained in the [illegible] of dramatics. It is [illegible] all that is art. More [illegible] is more thoroughly [illegible] in the pursuit of the legitimate [illegible] other branch of the [illegible]. While it is true that the [illegible] on a more commercial [illegible] than in former years, it [illegible] by any means deteriorated in [illegible].

"[illegible] commercial factor of the stage I believe is mainly due to the [illegible] of the public to witness a [illegible] whether it be musical [illegible] drama, as easily [illegible]. For this reason managers [illegible] when a piece has established [illegible] as a success, think [illegible] of sending out ten or more [illegible] on the tour of the country."

Picture Play by Boston People

A special motion picture play, made in Boston, with an all-star [illegible] of Boston people, and every [illegible] Boston, will be shown [illegible] the first time at the Boston [illegible] next week. Miss Katherine [illegible], the popular chief usher of [illegible] theatre, plays the principal [illegible] and other members of the [illegible] include Frederick Murray [illegible] of the Boston Theatre [illegible] Theatre and Keith's [illegible] Portland, stock com[illegible] the two [illegible] Thomas Ellston, [illegible] little Ella [illegible] and her brother [illegible] of Commissioner [illegible] of State Aid and [illegible] several other well known [illegible].

[illegible] before [illegible] season of [illegible] Orchestra [illegible] Westminster [illegible] Sunday afternoon, the [illegible] possible at this time to [illegible] there is no [illegible] that can be [illegible] the orchestra [illegible] of Boston, [illegible] the most prosperous [illegible].

[illegible] as unusually [illegible] does, Madame Melba, Miss Farrar, [illegible] Paderewski, Fritz Kreisler, Harold Bauer, Moriz Rosenthal, Ruth [illegible] and Ernest Schelling, as well as members of the orchestra like Messrs. Witek, Noack, Warnke and Malkin. Great as is the support the orchestra receives from its out of town concerts, financially and every other way, its mainstay is, and must be, Boston. It is to be hoped that [illegible] city will this year, and in the future, support it as loyally, appreciatively and as generously as it has in the past.

The first in the series of popular-priced Sunday afternoon entertainments at the new Braves baseball field in Allston will be held this afternoon when the opening attraction will be a mammoth band concert [illegible] by 125 musicians, the pick of Boston [illegible] under the leadership of Barrington Sargent.

[illegible] bandstand, with its [illegible] will be [illegible]. The proceeds [illegible] to the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association.

[illegible] in that [illegible] more than [illegible] as ever be[illegible] outdoor concert [illegible] elaborate program [illegible] the expectation [illegible] will be of two [illegible] stationed upon a [illegible] between [illegible] box, a [illegible] of the [illegible] the full [illegible] the [illegible] has made [illegible] with the street railway [illegible] special street car service [illegible] that day. Like all of the entertainments to be given at Braves Field while the ball team is away, popular prices will prevail.

EVA TANGUAY'S COIN-MAIL COAT

This Is Only One of the Financial Strange Doings of the "I Don't Care" Actress.

Eva Tanguay is the only woman in the world, so far as known, who ever had a dress made out[illegible] of genuine United States coins. For several years Miss Tanguay has set the fashions for strikingly original [illegible] costumes. She is much imitated, and her celebrated white kid, "I Don't Care" costume has been copied by every actress who aspires to give a "correct imitation" of the [illegible] comedienne.

One of Miss Tanguay's novelties in the sartorial line has never been duplicated, however. This is the famous coat of mail, three feet long, weighing forty-two pounds and valued at more than [illegible]. The materials used were [illegible] of the finest gold mesh [illegible] more than 4000 brand-new [illegible] pennies. A cap and [illegible] of pennies match the coat, the whole worn over white silk tights, complete the picture.

Miss Tanguay, who makes her appearance at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week, has many peculiarities. She never does business with a bank. The [illegible] simply tosses her spare cash into a strong box in a safe deposit vault and allows it to lie there until she needs it.

As regards Miss Tanguay's business methods, they tell an [illegible] story of her first real [illegible] when [illegible] property owner in New York. [illegible] Miss Tanguay took apartments [illegible] on Morningside [illegible]. After a few days she decided, as [illegible] similar predicament [illegible] her rooms were not [illegible]. She would prefer to reduce the number of rooms and have more breathing space.

Sending for the owner, Miss Tanguay [illegible] to him that she expected to be a permanent tenant, she would like to have two walls torn [illegible] between two partments [illegible] two large rooms of four ordinary ones. The landlord [illegible] flatly refused.

"How much is this apartment building worth?" inquired the [illegible].

"Three hundred and sixty thousand dollars [illegible]."

"That's what you'll take for it?"

"Yes." [illegible] just [illegible] and we'll go down [illegible] buy the whole [illegible]."

Miss Mae Hopkins Fits Stage Role

When Mae Hopkins is seen at the opening of the Hollis Street Theatre Monday [illegible] the chorus girl in love with Leslie Tarlton in Thomas J. Gray's three act farce, "She's in Again," Ned Wayburn, the producer, defies any critic to say that she is not the real thing.

For half a dozen years Mae Hopkins has been the typical New York show girl. She has been sketched by Gibson Fisher [illegible] have [illegible] countless magazine [illegible]. She has [illegible] Ziegfeld's Follies, Weber & Fields and the Winter Garden [illegible] Mr. Wayburn selected her from a score of applicants for this particular role in "She's in Again" [illegible] type [illegible] metropolis [illegible].

The part of Suzanne Touraine, from "The Follies," is a difficult [illegible] that she has given genuine satisfaction to the management, critics and public and is very proud of the fact [illegible]. As here [illegible].

Tod to Give Free Dancing Lssons

Quentin Tod, who has captured the hearts of all the playgoers of Boston through his superb dancing in "Nobody Home" at the Wilbur Theatre, is an Englishman with a varied professional career. For several years Mr. Tod devoted his talents to the dramatic stage. Then finding that he would be happier in the musical field he became associated with George Edwardes' Gaiety Company, doing feature dancing, and was immediately taken up by the aristocracy of England, where he opened a school for dancing which made him independently rich.

If it hadn't been for the war Mr. Tod would still be in Europe, which would have been a great loss to our American stage.

He has planned, and is about to carry out the plan at the end of his engagement in "Nobody Home," to open a conservatoire of dancing in New York, only under different conditions than in London. Having accumulated more money than he can ever manage to spend, he intends to devote his time to training young men and women of America the art of dancing.

When he came here last year he opened a school in a Fifth avenue studio, where he taught most of the society folk the newest and smartest things in modern dancing. He won such recognition that a certain society leader of the metropolis furnished a large studio for Mr. Tod in the Metropolitan Opera House building, and this is where he will instruct any man or woman who thinks he or she has talent, absolutely free.

Mr. Tod is convinced that under his personal supervision he can bring out the best that is in any one who has the least talent combined with the desire to succeed.

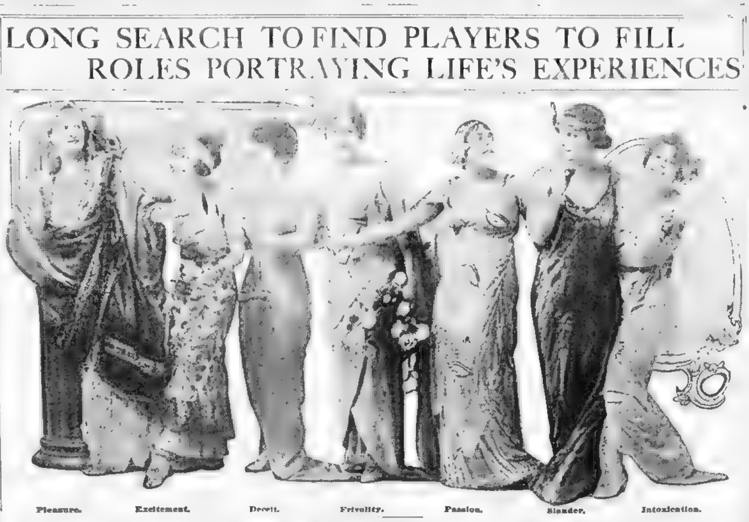
LONG SEARCH TO FIND PLAYERS TO FILL ROLES PORTRAYING LIFE'S EXPERIENCES



Pleasure. Excitement. Deceit. Frivolity. Passion. Slander. Intoxication.

Is it possible to select a type to personify each human emotion, virtue and vice? Do people in their outward aspect suggest their dominant traits of character?

The first answer to this question is likely to be "No." But a careful study of the works of Lombroso will show that [illegible] George [illegible] has [illegible] which [illegible] Shubert [illegible] has been selected to play certain roles which typify certain emotions.

Mr. Hobart has been more than two years writing the play, which has eighty-two separate roles and when he finished he had even greater difficulty [illegible] the right people to play [illegible].

The [illegible] role of [illegible] Then came the [illegible] life, a role calling [illegible] woman of the world who [illegible] fine clothes and [illegible] sixty applicants for this role before he finally engaged Miss Marie Horne, an English girl.

Two very difficult roles which bothered Mr. Hobart greatly were those of Intoxication and Passion. The first called for a woman who could suggest the [illegible] of the grape, and yet whose intoxication would be of such a refined nature that it would not offend. Nearly every actress who acted the [illegible] Mr. Hobart [illegible] Dorothy Parker came upon the [illegible]. Miss Parker [illegible] that you might expect from a [illegible] woman [illegible] champagne.

In the story there [illegible] dramatic struggle between [illegible]. At first he [illegible] by Intoxication but after [illegible] he becomes infatuated with [illegible] It was extremely difficult [illegible] to find the right person [illegible] but Mr. Hobart finally [illegible] the person of Florence Short, a dark oriental beauty of [illegible] with a deep voice and wonderful eyes. Dressed in a gown of purple with a crimson spotlight upon her, Passion makes an alluring figure as she comes upon the scene.

And then the character of Excitement had to be filled, dark, restless, charming, always changing, a will-o'-the-wisp, alluring and dangerous. What young woman could fill [illegible] specifications? [illegible] interviews with [illegible] Mr. Hobart [illegible] Andrews, [illegible] the Winter Garden.

Now enters the character that [illegible] with it an [illegible] Slander. Who [illegible] footless [illegible] this white [illegible] tions of love, but Mr. Hobart [illegible] actresses who applied for the role [illegible] Slander, but Mr. Hobart finally [illegible] qualities were personified. This [illegible] Miss Maude [illegible] was engaged [illegible].

In a similar way, the young women typifying Beauty, Fashion, Hope, Pleasure, Opportunity, Song and Deceit were picked out.

It Is the War of Man Against the Forces of Nature. Galveston Is the Battlefield To-day.

Egypt, Where the Nile Was Conquered; Holland, Where Dikes Were Built by Men, Controlling the Sea; the Terraced Hills of China, Venice Built on the Marsh ---All Those Are Conquests of the Real and Only Good War.

> "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."
> I. John, iii., 2.

THERE is one kind of war that honors men engaged in it. That war will continue hundreds of centuries hence, when the miserable wars of murder, of man against man, shall have been forgotten.

The good war is the war against Nature's power—against deserts, swamps, poisonous reptiles, disease germs and even the vast spaces that separate our planet from knowledge of the real universe.

In the beginning man, with a sharp flint fastened at the end of a stick, fought wild beasts and snakes—fighting his brother at the same time.

Later man ventured out upon the sea, braving the waves and the mystery of the ocean. The Phoenicians, Jews, were the first to venture out of sight of land; that was real courage and real war.

To-day men kill, fight their brothers, murder children, committing every crime in the name of glory. But they have risen steadily to a higher plane of war against the real enemy—Nature's power. Those capable of understanding progress and history can see, even through the smoke of battle and beyond the statistics of murder, a day when the earth shall know no war except the honorable war of mind against brute matter.

During the ages while men have been building monuments of bronze and marble to murderers, marking boundaries of battlefields, teaching children in schools that history is made up of battle, blood and war dates, the real and honorable war for which man was intended has gone on.

Italian peasants, living on the slope of Vesuvius and defying death, have fought the war to which they are the common soldiers.

The scientists who risked their lives descending into the craters of volcanos to study and warn the people have been officers in the war.

A great battle for humanity was won when, ages ago, primitive savages with irrigating ditches brought water from a distance to their fields.

The Chinese, with their terraced hillsides preserving the soil and defeating the destructive effects of rain, were warriors more admirable than any Waterloo murderer.

The men that established Venice on the swamps and marshes are the ancestors of the oldest noble line in Europe, older than any Hapsburg or other royalty.

They were men fleeing to the swamps to escape the "justice" that meant torture. There, where it was thought no man could live, where none could follow, they built huts on sticks at first, and finally the most beautiful city in the world, and the earth's great commercial empire. That was war worth while.

While Venice was still a salt marsh breeding mosquitoes in the Adriatic, while England was the home of savages where no Roman had ever been for tin or slaves, before Italy or Greece was heard of except as a mild climate for bandits, savages and cannibals, the Egyptians, controlled by priests that were engineers and used the name of God to compel obedience, were fighting the great war against the force of Nature.

They measured the rise of the water, distributed and utilized the flow of wet mud that meant crops and life. Because they understood the war against water, the control of the great Nile River, they built an old and wonderful civilization with its wealth of monuments and palaces all based on the river mud.

Real battles of the world were fought and won by the men who lived at the mouth of the Tigris and Euphrates. While the men "high up" raided and murdered each other the little people were kept working as common soldiers in the real war.

The brutality of man, his love of murder, his hatred of useful work, are illustrated in the story of one old king. After conquering and killing he wanted to do something useful. He wanted to divide the waters of a great river that they might fertilize many acres of land, instead of washing soil out to be lost. But he dared not insult the men of his army by saying that he wanted them to do USEFUL WORK. His favorite war horse had been drowned in the rushing water. He told the soldiers that that must not happen again, and they agreed with him. So he set them to work digging many narrow canals to carry the water in many different directions. And they worked heartily that there might be no more accidents to the horse on which the king rode to his murders. They would not have worked if the king had explained to them that he was using them to make lands fertile and life happier.

Kings were necessary in those days, for usually they were the most intelligent and thus became leaders. They were useful then, as they are vilely detrimental now.

History, as it is usually written, tells only of the battles in which one bandit leader of savages or king of a great nation murdered others to get their property. In days to come all such matters will be grouped briefly under one heading, and history will deal with the real war of the world—man's fight against cold and heat, floods, earthquakes, fire and lightning, superstition and IGNORANCE, the worst enemy of all.

Children will be taught that the day when a man brought the lightning down to the earth to be used by man was far more important than the date of the taking of Constantinople or the battle of Waterloo

They will be taught to celebrate the day when Atilla was defeated and slain, not because it was a battle, but because it meant that European intelligence then held back Asiatic barbarism.

They will learn that the day when Columbus sailed to conquer the ocean saw the beginning of the greatest victory in our history.

They will look with reverence not at the fort of Gibraltar, but at the dikes of Holland, which stand for man's conquest of the ocean; at the Suez and the Panama canals, which are monuments to man's dominion over the earth.

Very small will seem the battles of crowned murderers, the "glory" of uniformed cutthroats eager for conquest. Those soldiers that defended their land and their brothers against unprovoked attack will be honored as brave men, and all others looked upon as criminals, whose deeds are no more important to humanity or worthy of respect than the records of the prison death house.

More and more men will realize and pay tribute to the glory of those engaged in the real war.

The battle and the victory of San Francisco will be honored, and children told how the courage of man rose above disaster, conquered earthquake and fire, rebuilt the great city, and added to it with incredible rapidity another city of wonder, of beauty and of education—the great Exposition.

Children studying the map of the United States will have pointed out to them as a glorious battlefield the place where stands the city of Galveston. They will be told how the men of that city fought courageously against the ocean's power, building their great sea wall and rebuilding it, holding Nature in check, defying her in spite of death and storm.

Long ago the ancient writer told us:

> "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—Proverbs xvi., 32.

The farmer who digs a ditch to drain a swamp that breeds malaria, or to make the wet spots in his field fertile, is a better man and more useful infinitely than nine-tenths of all the heroes that history describes.

The doctor who does his work fighting pestilence in the hospitals, risking and suffering death in his experiments with the yellow fever, smallpox and diseases more dreadful, stands far above the famous d'Auvergne, who continued shouting to warn his comrades while the Englishmen drove their bayonets into his body. He, too, was brave, for he was defending his brothers, and the French do well to honor him. But his courage was not that of the man who without hope of glory gives his life to science, and it was infinitely below that of the mother who goes patiently and without complaint through a life of toil and poverty for the sake of her children.

There are many glorious battlefields on the surface on this globe, but they are not the fields where men have fallen murdering each other.

There is but one glorious war, and it will go on through the ages, through thousands and millions of centuries—the war of man to make the earth his own; to change the deserts into gardens, the swamps into fertile lands, the forests into beautiful parks and humanity into a race of brothers

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be," indeed. We shall be the rulers of this earth, and the earth a habitation worthy of thinking men, worthy of an intelligence able to fight against Nature.

And the war will not stop here. It will not be confined to the earth. It will spread out into space; man will conquer the great distances that separate us from older planets in our solar system.

We shall talk with them, learn from them, as children learn from their elders. We shall not be mean, superstitious, shivering, terror-stricken creatures, crouching before the lightning and the thunder, walking in degrading fear of hell-fire or of the next flood.

But we shall be MEN, real conquerors of the earth, possessing real knowledge. Then "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Why China's Women Should Be Ardent Suffragists

Plural Marriages, Domestic Slavery, the Slaving of Infant Girls and Other Evils Which Might Be Abolished if Chinese Women Could Gain Their Rights.

By Edith Blake,
Distinguished Traveller and Writer

THE power of Chinese parents over their children is supreme, and has the force of the law behind it. Should a son or daughter be even guilty of using abusive language to parents or paternal grandparents, and should the parents make complaint to a magistrate that they themselves heard such language, the delinquent is liable to death by strangulation;

In the matter of marriage, girls are not given much choice in the selection of the future husband, but neither has the man the choice of his bride. As is often the case in Ireland, marriages are made by match-makers, not by heaven

So long as her parents-in-law live the son's wife is subordinate to them; even in England a mother-in-law is not always regarded with favor, and as Chinese women are as human in their feelings and tempers as are those of other races, even the rigidity of Celestial etiquette does not invariably suffice to insure agreeable relations between a mother-in-law and her son's wife

There is only one legal wife in China; she is the Kit-fat, and she alone is carried to the bridegroom's house in the red sedan chair The necessities of ancestral worship, however, have led to the habit—usual, but not universal—of the existence of one or more secondary wives or concubines, whose presence does not always increase the harmony of the household

To the Kit-fat belongs whatever of dignity and importance attaches to the family, but as she has been selected to fill the position without the husband having had much voice in the matter, should she not meet with his approval, he generally consoles himself by taking a secondary wife chosen by himself. The Kit-fat may be legally divorced on seven accounts: if she has no children, if she proves immoral; disobedient to her husband's parents; over-talkative, given to thieving; if she is jealous; or afflicted with leprosy.

This sounds a very comprehensive series of reasons; yet in point of fact none of them can be urged if the wife has observed mourning during three years for her husband's parents, if the family has become wealthy, having been poor when she married; or if her parents are dead, so that she cannot return to them, so it is easier and pleasanter to take a secondary wife than to get rid of a first one, and divorces are consequently more rare than elsewhere,

Little girls are brought up to look forward to marriage as their goal in life; but when the desired end is about to be attained, etiquette prescribes that the bride-elect must weep or pretend to do so for three days previous to the wedding so as to display fitting regret at leaving the paternal roof. A broom is the emblem of her new duties as a wife; the day after the wedding the bride takes a broom—in wealthy families symbolically, in poor ones actually—and sweeps the house.

The women have great tenacity of purpose, and do not flinch from death when a sense of duty makes them resolve on committing suicide It is regarded as meritorious in a widow to die with her husband, and the custom of widows so immolating themselves still exists. Such a ceremony took place in 1861 at Amoy with much pomp. The widow, who was only twenty-five years of age, had no children or parents, so resolved on following her husband to the spirit land.

A few days before the one on which she had appointed to die she was carried round the town in a wedding chair, not closed as at an actual wedding, but open, so that all might see her as she passed. She invited the people to come to see her make her exit from this life. She was accompanied by a procession such as is seen at weddings. On the day fixed for her death, attired in richly embroidered wedding garments of red silk, with a gilt coronet such as is worn by brides, and seated in the same chair, the young woman was carried to the scaffold.

There she got out of the chair, and without displaying any emotion, calmly sat down and partook of refreshment prepared on a lower platform of the scaffold. When the meal was finished she addressed the surrounding crowd, and taking some handfuls of uncooked rice from a bowl which stood on the table, she scattered it among the people, who eagerly scrambled to secure a few grains sanctified by her blessing. She then ascended to the upper scaffold, with her own hands passed the noose around her neck, and in a few moments all was over.

Kidnapping little girls to sell as slaves is a regular trade in China, where domestic slavery exists, though those who steal the children are liable to severe punishment if detected. Once the children are smuggled away from the neighborhood of their homes it is difficult to bring the crime home to its perpetrators. The lot of many of the unfortunate little girls so carried off is frequently as sad as that of the victims of the "white slave" traffic of Europe.

Little girls are often dressed as boys to obviate the danger of their being abducted by kidnappers; whereas small boys are sometimes clothed in feminine garments with the object of preventing interference with the child's soul by malignant spirits.

The custom of exposing or destroying infant girls is often quoted as proving the indifference to female life in China. It is true the practise is common among the very poor, who cannot afford to furnish the necessary dowry should their daughters grow up and marry. The law that married daughters are not called upon to contribute to the support of their own parents, but must do so for their parents-in-law, is largely accountable for the custom of girl infanticide, which is seldom resorted to by those who are better off.

"To Make Eugenics Possible We Must Shape The Romantic Love Ideals of Our Girl Babies"

Mary L. Read, the Director of New York's Famous School of Mothercraft, Advances the Theory That "As the Romantic Ideals of Young Women Determine Their Choice in Marrying, All We Need to Do to Make Them Marry the Right Man Is to Begin from the Cradle to Form the Right Kind of Ideals for Them."

By Mary L. Read,
Director of the School of Mothercraft

"The first real awakening of a child's future ideals comes with her first dolls. As soon as the little girl is big enough to have dolls she is big enough to begin to have her romantic ideals formed for the right kind of future husband."

RIGHTLY understood, romantic love and eugenics are not hostile forces, but allies. The greatest motive romantic love can have is eugenics—the prophetic forethought for the little welcome child who shall come in the course of the years as the blessing to that love. And the greatest avenue for eugenics is through romantic love which shall bring two lives into enduring comradeship in a home where a little child shall dwell.

It is only superficial fiction writers or scientists who write otherwise, and only superficial or ignorant persons who think otherwise. The great scientists—such men as Galton, Jordan, Davenport—are human enough to see life as a whole, and they have urged the importance of romantic love in eugenics. And the great poets and novelists have made their heroines fall in love with noble, strong characters, and have anticipated or even written of the home and the children, all of which is eugenics from the poetic perspective of romance

Eugenics in a narrow or perverted sence may become morbid, pathological, unwholesome, foolish. Eugenics, in its true and large meaning, is child welfare, love for the little child, carried forward to future generations Its mainspring is parental instinct. Its realization is through romantic love; and its recognition is through the romantic ideals of young men and women

Under existing conditions in our social life, positive eugenics in the actual affairs of life rests in the last analysis, upon young women It is not what the sociologists urge nor the scientists reveal nor the physicians preach about eugenics that can realize the being-well-born of one single child. The one person who can translate their theories into realities the only person who can make positive eugenics an art, the only person who can choose the heredity for the world's children is the young woman who is to be the mother of the child herself

When marriages were arranged by the relatives of the bride and bridegroom, without so much as "by your leave" of the contracting couple, romantic love was a negligible factor. In the Days of Chivalry, in certain circles of society, it was, indeed, expected that romantic love would not exist between husband and wife

One writer on European social conditions remarks on how often it happened that in mediaeval and later times husband and wife did develop a love for each other, a kind of romantic love. The approximate similarity in age, and the similarity of class, with consequently some mutual interests and tastes would naturally produce such a sympathy and love more often in the case of European homes than in Asiatic countries, where the bride came as a child, and as the slave of her mother-in-law.

Romantic Love Should Come by a Woman's Twentieth Year.

When marriage was practically the only vocation open to a woman (if she was not to remain as a charge upon her father's household), the matter of getting a husband (and consequently a livelihood after some fashion) was the primary and essential consideration In the case of a woman who did not have the proper relatives for negotiating her marriage or in the days when this became more a responsibility for the woman herself, this main issue called for a kind of cleverness in securing the man—and consequently the livelihood she would prefer

Wanting such wit or such a desirable prospect in the range of her acquaintance or geographical possibilities, she must resign herself to the fate of what was available and make the best of its limitations and inconveniences. She might comfort herself with Rosalind's advice to Phoebe in "As You Like It." Well meaning philanthropists and sociologists in England not more than a century ago, instead of providing scholarships for girls to go through college, sought a dowry for them so they could find a desirable husband who would take them with the dowry

No woman has ever been freer to choose her mate—and to reject any or all suitors—than the American young woman of to-day Economic necessity no longer compels her to choose marriage for her support. The matter of training for her own self-support has become the chief consideration with educators and parents, even to the overshadowing or neglect of training for home-making. How many special schools are there for training in home-making for every one that trains young women for self-support?

Not infrequently a young woman must choose between her industrial position of good income with singleness of life or a home, a family and a husband with no larger an income than the one she resigns to be shared among them. The lines of democracy are so broad, and social class distinctions so vague, that public opinion, that great arbiter, allows a wide social range

In a country where social class distinctions are not hereditary, where any person of fair ability, with ambition, courage and persistence may arrive at social recognition, and whoever contributes in a fair measure to the social welfare is welcomed to the American family group; where day laborers, backwoodsmen and bootblacks may become great industrial leaders, plutocrats, statesmen, authors; where monumental fortunes are leveled over night and reputations lost in a day, social distinctions are mere ropes of sand shifted by the winds of circumstance

Of the several millions of men and women of marriageable age and condition in the United States, not more than ten per cent at the extreme heights of plutocracy or the extreme depths of degeneracy are outside the pale. Adaptability, power to grow, is a far greater consideration in such a country than present economic status or intellectual plane or social class

So far has the pendulum swung that in some circles, known among themselves as "the most advanced," it is now considered that a girl reflects greater credit upon her family, her classmates, her teachers, if she follows a single-tracked, independent public career than if she devotes herself to a husband, a home and a family.

In brief, even romantic love has its competitors for a girl's attention, interest and devotion. And as economic necessity, class distinctions, social disapproval for feminine celibacy, decrease as incentives for a woman's marrying, romantic love becomes the ruling motive with more of those who do marry. And the last United States census showed that some seventy per cent of the women over nineteen have married.

Romantic love is as normal to a girl somewhere in her teens as crying was at six months, or the telling of marvelous imaginative tales at six years (which some people who did not know called lying), or playing grown-up at ten. If there are no evidences of romantic love or interest by the time a young woman is twenty it is a suspicious condition, and subject for psychopathic consideration Not that a young woman need have fallen in love with any man at this age. Perhaps she has not seen the man who fits her ideal, or she may be so content still to love her ideal that no actual or supposed personification interests her

A girl has cherished and loved an ideal long before she loves any man. This ideal is her creation which has thrived and developed with her mind and her heart for years. God made her with a heart to love a man. And God made her with a mind to think before the time of the blossoming of that romantic love. That ideal lover has grown up with her and developed as she has developed, changing, evolving, from her earliest days. It is her creation, modified by all she has seen and heard and experienced and known

If you put the question to her point blank, she would probably declare that she could not describe her ideal, but if you are clever at indirect questioning you can soon discover what are the indispensable characteristics

Choice of an Ideal Mate Begins in Early Girlhood.

She began thinking about it when she was a very little girl and somebody taught her how to count the buttons on her dress in order to find out what kind of a man she was going to marry: "Rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief; doctor, lawyer, merchant, priest; tinker, tailor, soldier, sailor; ragman, bagman." What serious connings those were at six and seven years! Later, at ten or twelve, she learned to count the daisy leaves, "One I love, two I love" In her high school days her incessant conversation about the boys was the annoyance or amusement of her teachers, some of whom did not appreciate that it was her interest in the genus BOY and not in A boy that stimulated all these discussions

Yes, this ideal has occupied a good deal of her attention, and she has puzzled much over the discrepancies between the different ideals that have been set before her, and out of them all and none of them she has fashioned her own Prince Charming.

Youth is a synonym for inexperience Wanting that true knowledge of values that can come only with experience, it judges the worth of persons and personal qualities largely by the values that society puts upon them, just as childhood estimates right and wrong by the esteem which grown-ups place upon actions. A girl's romantic ideal is made up of the qualities that her environment has taught her to admire, whether these qualities are nobleness of character or sporting proclivities, social accomplishments, serviceability, money-making, athletic physique, fastidiousness, effeminacy, artistic temperament, parasitism, industry, highmindedness, crudeness, culture

Here is Arabella, brought up in a large city, attending a fashionable boarding school whose reading has been chiefly current magazine fiction, who is a devotee of the light operas, whose piano is littered with the latest popular songs, and whose family praise the good matches made by the girls who have married foreign titles, and express as unstintedly their pity or scorn of the girls who have married a man with less than three thousand a year

What Society Owes to Its Women's Romantic Ideals.

Here is Martha, who has been brought up on a farm, attended the rural school, read little outside the school classics and the weekly newspaper, lived much in the great out-of-doors, spent her spare time in helping with the housework, and found her recreation in church fairs, sleighing parties and Sunday school picnics

Or there is Katherine, whose father is a professional man, whose mother is a leader, taught classic art and culture from babyhood, in parish and club work; a girl who has been in her home, her music, her books, whose career is leading her on to college.

Or here is Bessie, who went from grammar school directly to work, whose father is a mechanic, and whose mother toils from morning to night in the dingy little home to keep a large and boisterous family decently clothed and fed; a girl whose mental horizon is bounded by the occasional newspaper and the cheap magazine, whose recreations are the movies, the amusement park and the skating rink, or perhaps a girls' club party

Here are types of girls, some of them numbered by the thousands, other by the hundreds of thousands. There are half a dozen other types of girls as distinctive as these in that group of five million girls between fifteen and twenty-five years of age. Each type of girl has a type of ideal, a kind of composite of the ideals of the girls in that group.

For one type of girl her romantic ideal must be a good dancer, a good spender, and of ample income. Another girl requires a well trained mind, intellectual interests, culture. To one type of girl the young dancer or the fascinating young actor is the ideal for adoration; another type would scorn such characteristics and demands a sober-minded, staid, industrious ideal. There is a type that has evolved as her ideal a social reformer or minister or missionary. One girl would scorn drinking or smoking as admirable qualities; another would consider these matter of course, and a third would require such proclivities in any ideal that she could respect. One girl could not fall in love with an ideal that did not dance superbly, and another could not fall in love with one who danced at all

Each girl of those five million has her ideal in her romance, who is similar to the ideal of thousands of other girls, in many characteristics, but with enough of her own individuality reflected to give a distinctive personality.

The romantic ideal of its young women is one of the greatest factors in the welfare of society. And the shaping of the romantic ideals of its young women is one of the greatest responsibilities that society has before it. This is a responsibility that belongs to no one member of society but to all.

It is in fact that great thing and the only thing to make eugenics practicable. Parents cannot bear responsibility entirely, yet in the main it rests upon them and they cannot shift it upon other persons or institutions.

What are the mother and father doing in the home to guide the musical and dramatic and social tastes of their daughters? Do they help them select the plays that are true to the eternal verities of life, and attend the theatre with them, and discuss the characters they have seen? Do they read novels with their daughters, and discuss the people who are there portrayed, their motives, their traits, the consequences of their actions? Is the family conversation about marriage, children family relations, of a wholesome and encouraging or a flippant or silly tone?

How to Make Your Daughter's Love Ideals Strong..

Do they cultivate, patiently, tactfully, sensibly, the confidence of their daughters so that when the puzzling problems of romance come these daughters may naturally and confidently turn to their own home for guidance and sympathy? Do they make their home a pleasant place for the young people to come, singly or in groups, for their fun and social life? Do they take the trouble and the tact to cultivate the acquaintance of boys of worthy qualities for their daughters?

Schools and churches cannot escape their responsibility. Teachers and preachers are guilty of criminal negligence if they ignore their part in the shaping of this ideal, if they ignore this normal interest in the minds of the young girls under their instruction, or treat it foolishly or slightingly

Playwrights, poets, musicians, editors, writers, theatre managers, song makers, club directors, librarians, all have a large share in this responsibility

If you want the bones of a child to be strong and firm, you must feed it with food that will build sturdy bones while these are growing; to wait until ten years of age will be too late If you want the romantic ideals of a young woman to be strong, you must feed her imagination upon strong and noble traits while she is a mere child and her ideals are taking shape To wait until she is eighteen or fourteen or ten years old will be very late.

You can teach her in those early years to admire qualities and characteristics that you know make for domestic happiness and eugenics. Even in childhood a girl is capable of a true perspective on life and romantic love And in those earlier years, before the age of romance begins for her, she is not silly about it—except by imitation

She has the imagination to see her life not as culminating in the pageantry of a wedding as the storybooks and the plays used to do. With the merest indirect suggestion she will anticipate her life in her own home with her children playing about her and the good man coming home at dusk. But you must not attempt to pry into these pictures. You must not be flippant about them. And you must not soliloquize about them. She expects you to be matter-of-fact and sensible about them. She looks upon them with reverence, and it would be sacrilege for you to do less.

If she sees these pictures clearly at fourteen, she is more likely to be realizing them at thirty-five than to be imagining them then over her bachelor chafing-dish. The greatest value of such home economics as is taught in the schools and the college to-day lies not in its technical training It lies in the directing of the attention of girls towards the home, the perspective of life which naturaly includes her home and her responsibilities as home-maker.

To work out theoretically the division of a family income of a thousand dollars a year, and to learn in passing that not more than ten per cent of the men in the community have incomes of three thousand dollars, goes a long way towards giving a sensible and reasonable economic status to a girl's romantic ideal. To learn how to dress and take care of babies, how to feed little children and play with them, may be part of that information that will be forgotten as readily as Latin or algebra. But such experiences, whether in a girl's own home or as part of her school training, will cultivate a natural and wholesome attitude toward motherhood, with some foresight of its joys and its responsibilities, and a bias toward good hereditary traits in her romantic ideal

A girl rarely marries the first man she falls in love with, for with experience and wider acquaintance her ideal changes. The ideal she cherished at sixteen is rarely the one she would choose at twenty. Sometimes her ideal is an impossible combination; she never finds it or deceives herself into thinking she has found it. Sometimes it is an ideal for whose comradeship she has not fitted herself

Oftentimes her vision is so filled with her ideal it covers, as a mantle and a mask, the man whom she chooses to have wear it. As a woman approaches twenty-five her impulse becomes tempered with more of judgment and conservatism. She sees here and there women who have married, as they supposed, their ideal, repeating Titania's experience; or other women who, in the ignorance of youth, had overlooked some of the characteristics that are most essential for harmony and happiness

Why is a divorce a rarity among college women who have married? Is it not in large measure because they have developed a definite and well-balanced ideal, fashioned not out of light fiction and childish whims, girlish wishes, petty desires and narrow perspective? In literature and history they have known heroes of heroic mold and large parts.

Men will do and become whatever she decree, in order to win her; they will dance or preach, they will be cultured or crude; gamblers or reformers, chivalrous or selfish, gentlemen or cads, peacemakers or warriors, athletes or weaklings, workers or parasites. She holds the balance of power.

As the romantic ideals of young women determine their choice in marrying, so whatever is shaping these ideals is determining the characteristics of posterity and shaping the destiny of society. This is practical eugenics and we do not need the formula of a scientist to guide us in putting it into practice.

An English Scholar Explains Why Germany Hates England

Austin Harrison, Editor of the English Review, Sees in This War a Colossal Racial Struggle That No Treaties Can Ever End.

By Austin Harrison.
Editor English Review

IN German opinion, Great Britain was in the position of the great landowner who refuses to sell his land. She possessed everything, they contended, all the colonies, all the power, all the markets, all the cables, coaling-stations, naval bases, all the outlets she desired, which she maintained by her monopoly of sea power at the cost of the non-seafaring peoples. England was thus the great tyrant of civilization. All her possessions had been obtained by force, by political seizure, and by her policy of grab and political dishonesty. The pirate kingdom of the modern world, she was able to hold her position because she had been the first to grasp the value of sea power, whereas the other nations had always been too preoccupied and too unadventurous to challenge it. But this condition, a condition which implied fixture of continuity, could not be accepted by the new German people conscious of their own historical purpose, for there was no permanency in the world, moreover the very acceptance of such a condition presupposed a weakness entirely alien to Germanic thought and dignity

If sea power was indispensable to the English, so it was indispensable to Germans. As it was, Germany could not develop. Wherever she attempted to impose herself, English interests crossed her path. Even from the abstract view of force, England's claim was unfounded. The ultima ratio of right was might. But the British Empire had grown out of all proportion to its defensible possibilities. No self-respecting nation could accept the claim of any one which inspired Pan-Germanism

Such, in brief, is the German exposition of the case which, whether it be called Pan-Germanism or Kaiserism, constituted the bed rock of opinion in the Fatherland while we were seeking to pacify the Germans by pretending it was not so. The truth is that the Germans for thirty years now have looked upon England as the real enemy, the last obstacle to their self realization And it is this spirit of envy and hatred which has lain behind the German theory of war or valor, which prompted the Kaiser to build up to our fleet.

The hatred the Germans bear toward us is no artificial product capable of adjustment through the soothing influences of time and persuasion; it is a racial philosophy of life As such it has become not only a policy, but a national doctrine—the philosophy of the "top dog." So the German people long ago made up their minds to be the first in the world, in plain words to fight their way up to European supremacy by land and by sea. In a people which holds itself by some special dispensation of Providence to be the chosen warriors of the modern world and the pathfinders of a higher civilization, committed, as it were, by predestined law to win to the place thus assigned to them, this hatred of the rival Power is seen to be logical, if to others it may appear unreasonable. There is, moreover, an intellectual force in the notion of a higher Germanic culture which naturally appeals to a race characterized throughout history as nationally uncertain of itself. Codified as a State ethic, envy is apt to demoralize any people. When magnified into a religion its effects are bound to be disastrous, as we see in the case of Germany

History can present no other case of national envy being raised into a scientific statement of life such as the German attitude. Thus the object of the war was to crush France not only in the ordinary military sense, but to annihilate the French race. For years this policy has been discussed by Germans of all classes and accepted as the German right and intellectual privilege. Maximilian Harden, for instance, has bluntly formulated the German aim and even abused the Government for not being honest enough publicly to admit it. Once France had been reduced to a vassal State, necessarily drawing Holland and Belgium into the Germanic Federation, Germany with a wide seaborder would be in the position to cope with England. Not a German ever considered the morality of such action. Not a professor ever rose up to denounce the criminality of such a statesmanship.

When the German newspapers accuse us of being responsible for the war because we never declared our intentions, there is a cynical truth about the assertion which we cannot refute. Had we possessed a national army last Summer there would have been no ultimatum to Serbia. Had we announced officially in the House of Commons about the middle of July, 1914, our firm intention to fight for France if that Power was attacked, in all probability the war would have been avoided, though I admit, only postponed.

That is the reason why the German hatred is now directed chiefly at us. If we failed to grasp the military situation before the war, let us at least understand the political one which we shall have to face now for a century. Our intervention has thwarted the whole German military design. Our ships have swept German commerce from off the seas. Our valiant expeditionary army held up the German flanking advance at the crucial moment. The entire western campaign has miscarried largely owing to our armed support. These things the Germans will never forgive us. The hatred they bore us before the war will henceforth be doubled. We must prepare now to meet the full venom of German rancor on the field of battle and in political life.

No greater mistake could be made than to assume that this war will be terminated by ordinary paper treaties and conventions, by conferences of so-called distinguished ambassadors, with the usual lack of results either to the victor or the vanquished. This war will be the most terrible in all history and the most fiercely contested. No parchment documents can settle it. The problem is not one of statesmanship or Kings. As a racial movement, it will only be ended with the military destruction of that race crippled of its power for evil.

How a Good Temper Lengthens Life And a Bad One Shortens It

The Important Products That the Ductless Glands Pour Into the Blood Under the Influence of Rage, Hate, Fear, Happiness or Mirth, Described by Dr. Woods Hutchinson, the Foremost Physician Writer.

By Dr. Woods Hutchinson.

THE general rule holds that whenever we feel [illegible] and enjoyment and mirth, [illegible] or laugh, even [illegible] witty remark or a comic [illegible] the flow of our saliva, we [illegible] circulation of our blood, we assist digestion and increase the general powers of [illegible] upbuilding all over our bodies. So [illegible] laughter are, from a physiological point of view, one of the most health-[illegible] life-lengthening exercises that we [illegible] indulge in.

This [illegible] may be said fairly positively. But there [illegible] to be now high probability that their [illegible] effects go even farther than mere digestive and assimilative improvements. [illegible] reason is that the opposite emotions, those of fear and of rage, have recently yielded up their secrets in a miraculous manner [illegible] test tube and the microscope, and their [illegible] and expression have been [illegible] pouring into the blood ferments and stimuli, called hormones, which [illegible] most extraordinary effects upon [illegible] activities of the body. There is, for instance, one single gland, called the adrenal, from the fact that it lies upon the kidney, which, whenever an attack of fear or rage [illegible] promptly pours into the blood not less than three different hormones and enzymes. The first of these stimulates the heart beat so as to raise the steam pressure of the entire body in preparation for a fight or a run; the second dilates the blood-vessels of the muscles all over the body, so as to provide them with liquid fuel, the blood, and at the same time contracts the blood vessels in the stomach and intestines, where blood is not immediately needed, and paralyzes the unstripped muscles of their walls. This hormone explains the immediate well known wreckage of the digestion that can be produced by bad news, sudden fright, or a fit of anger during or shortly after a meal. Finally, the third hormone causes the liver to throw into the blood a large quantity of our principal muscle fuel, sugar, so as to be ready for a struggle, a fight or a run for life.

If all these significant, far-reaching changes can be produced in the heart, liver, intestines and the blood simply by an attack of rage, it is certainly not unreasonable to suppose that the opposite type of emotions, pleasure and mirth will be accompanied by secretions and changes which are almost as profoundly beneficial as the others are disturbing.

This helps to explain the extraordinary value which unschooled and unspoiled humanity has always placed upon laughter. There is nothing that the people will not pay a man, nothing, almost, that they will not forgive him, if he will only make them laugh. The eagerness with which the average man seeks the companionship of the man who has a reputation as a wit, who has a ready flow of humor and drollery, or is a good story-teller, is something almost pathetic, and would be astonishing if it were not so common.

Nobody speaking with the voice of authority has ever told him that it was particularly good for him to laugh. The doctor has usually been rather inclined to think it beneath his professional dignity to advise his patients to go and get a good laugh, although the most successful and popular practitioners of the healing art are often precisely those who have the gift of humor and the capacity for inducing their patients to look upon the bright side of things.

The theologian has been inclined to frown down upon laughter as the enemy of reverence, and make disparaging remarks about the "crackling thorns under the pot," and the "laughter of the fool." The philosopher has usually been deathly afraid of it, for few of his pompous statements would stand its electric shock and flashlight revelations of absurdity. But the man in the street, in spite of the authority of all the Big Wigs, has insistently demanded two things—bread and laughter.

Not only is laughter most valuable and healthful for its age-long gastronomic associations, so deeply imbedded in every fibre of our being, both physical and mental, but also in its later developments and its derived effects. In its more active forms it is an extremely valuable respiratory gymnastics and general muscular exercise. No gymnasium-designed system of exercises can equal it for a moment or call into play half so many widely separated muscles.

A good, hearty laugh ventilates every cranny of the lungs, shakes the shoulders, stretches the sides, massages the liver, smooths the wrinkles and crease out of the face, flushes the whole skin mesh all over the body with blood, sluices out the eyes, increases the flow of saliva and the nasal mucous, stimulates the kidneys. So that, by the time you have pulled yourself together, picked up your spectacles, blown your nose, wiped your eyes, mopped the perspiration from your brow and straightened out your vest and collar, you feel like a different man, or better still, like a boy again. One touch of laughter makes the whole world kind and a laugh is the most potent humanizer, the best reducer of all things and persons to their common denominator on earth. It is the finest reliever of tension, the best flusher out of dammed up secretions, the greatest mental disinfectant and ozonizer known.

Just how those more violent and extensive bodily movements, literally shaking and convulsing us from scalp to toes, came to be added on to the milder grinning and gurgling and chortling expressions of pleasurable anticipation, is a difficult question. The only suggestion which has ever been made which seems even probable, is that they came about gradually by revulsion or reversing; i. e., by doing as nearly as possible exactly the opposite of what we would if our intentions were hostile and menacing, so as to show how perfectly friendly and harmless our intentions are.

This comes from the fight, rather than the food, side of our experiences, and means a further step up in the mental scale. It is, of course, obvious that all our expressions of pleasure, of pain, or dislike, were originally quite unintentional and instinctive, without any special reference to their effect upon others who might see them. But it was not very long before they began to be recognized and interpreted by others, as indications of the state of our mind and temper. From this it was but a step to the deliberate, so to speak, artificial, use of our expressions, for the purpose of conveying messages to others, of like or dislike, as the case might be. So that in this way many original mild and slight movements and sounds have become very greatly magnified and increased in range for dramatic purposes.

This is very clearly seen in the hostile and aggressive emotions, as for instance, the horrible frowns and grimaces, the menacing gestures and shrieks and roars, which not merely animals, but savage and barbarous men make use of in order to strike terror into their enemies. Something of the same sort seems to have occurred in laughter, only in the opposite direction; i. e., instead of assuming an angry air and a rigid, menacing attitude, ready for a fight at the drop of the hat, as the saying is, we throw ourselves into our most relaxed and helplessly undefended condition, throwing our heads backward, our hands up in the air, and swaying the body backward and forward, or shaking it from side to side in a very ecstasy of relaxation and soft harmlessness. Just as a man in a somewhat difficult situation nowadays will try to "laugh it off" as a joke. Or as a savage, meeting men of a strange tribe to show he meant no harm and coming forward for peaceful parley with them, will throw out his arms wide and hold his hands spread open to show that he has no weapons either in his grasp or his belt or up his sleeve, and walk slowly forward with face held erect.

Out of this, for instance, has grown the most irrational-looking habit of shaking hands. Two strangers on meeting both throw out the right or sword arm with the hand widely extended, to show that they bear no weapon nor malice. When they come close enough each one grasps the outstretched and open hand of the other and endeavors to raise it to his lips for the purpose of polite salutation. Neither will be outdone in politeness, and each tries to kiss the other's hand, and the resulting struggle is that singular up-and-down pump-handle movement which has become the conventional greeting of civilization.

Another good association which still hangs about laughter from its early pleasures-of-the-table origin, is the frame of mind and the character of the things with which it is associated. Without attempting to open the terrible question of just why a joke is funny and why certain things are laughable and others not, one general rule can be laid down, and that is, that the incidents which provoke laughter must be of a pleasurable nature or at least far from painful and distressing. We laugh uproariously, for instance, if we see a man meet with some grotesque of trifling accident, where we know he is not much hurt. But we would feel like anything but laughing if he had broken a limb or was in danger of drowning, no matter how ridiculous his contortions might be.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson.

Much as we may deplore some of the influences of popular amusements, vaudeville shows, moving pictures, etc., they have one great and overmastering virtue, and that is that they for the most part make us and leave us kindlier, more humane, better pleased with our fellows and with ourselves. Those things which are considered too high and too serious, and even too sacred for laughter, valuable and indispensable as they may be, are precisely the realms in which we have gone to the most lamentable extremes of cruelty, intolerance and injustice.

Whenever we begin to take ourselves, our politics, our social or religious views too seriously, because afraid to laugh at their extremes, we run into danger at once. That which cannot survive being laughed at, good-humoredly, in some of its respects at least, is either ill-balanced or unfounded. The best corrective for warped, extreme, inhuman views and attitudes upon any question is good-natured ridicule and satire and fun. The "Sunday Comic" and the character artist of the stage are far more humanizing and civilizing than the Greek myths and half the folk-tales and fairy-tales.

There may be unkind and unfeeling laughter, but it is only a very small per cent of the total. That which we laugh at must be enjoyable to us and, under civilized conditions, either enjoyable or at least tolerable to those who are the subjects, or the victims of it.

Chesterton's Views Upon the "Fallacies of the Peace Propagandists"

"The World Cannot Afford to Allow Germany's Breach of Contract in the Spoliation of Belgium to Go Unpunished," Says the Distinguished English Essayist and Social Philosopher.

By G. K. Chesterton.

IT is often a mistake to silence a man, because it leaves the world under the impression that he had something to say. For this reason I would not proceed against the very small organizations which urge the conclusion of peace, or, in other words, the leaving of Prussia in possession of her spoils.

Coercion, like conscription, is a legitimate expedient, but not a very native, and therefore not a very easy, one; I should, on the whole, advise the English not to build their safety on the novel and rather unnational logic of persecution, even of justifiable persecution. I should advise them to build on the grand, firm and enduring foundation of the Pacifist's controversial incompetence. After some study of all his works, I have come to feel confidence in him. He can be trusted to fail; and the more publicly he fails the better.

I set him on a high tribune; I encircle him with the silence of a crowded amphitheatre; I cry aloud "Favete linguis!" Then he opens his mouth wide; and no words come forth. Or, what is the same thing, words like the following: "We believe that the right course is not for us to admonish peace lovers in other countries as to their duty in regard to their Governments, but to show that we are in earnest by demanding that Britain's part in the war shall be brought to an immediate, honorable and righteous finish."

What can we possibly do with a thing like that, unless it were to answer, with equal gravity, that we are in favor of a square, circular and triangular finish, or that we incline rather to a thin, fat, and middle-sized finish? It is simply self-evident that an immediate peace could not be an honorable one, since, apart from all explanations with Germany, we should have to have an explanation with our allies.

No; these people can be trusted—to trip. Everything they try to say can be twisted inside out with a turn of the hand. It is far better to treat them so, as they turn up, than to move against them as serious heresiarchs, and provide them with a heresy they have not the wits to invent.

The words I quote are from a queer piece of paper circulated by something called "The Stop-the-War Committee." Being deprived by Heaven of the power of speech, it relieves its feelings chiefly by capital letters, one or two words in almost every sentence being thus printed without any particular reference to what the words are. Thus: "The BEST and most HUMANE course would be to negotiate rather than to drive the Germans out."

To which, in the same reverent spirit of imitation, I can only answer that it is JUST AS well, as A RULE, to form some NOTION OF WHAT words mean when you use THEM. And what the word "negotiation" must mean, at the very best, is manifest enough.

Note that negotiation has nothing to do with moral persuasion, which the finer sort of fanatics would probably put forth as superior to war. If Mr. Scott Duckers (who seems responsible for the piece of paper) could go to the Kaiser and speak to him such soul inflaming eloquence that the Kaiser burst into tears and called off the dogs of war, the incident (though improbable) might well be maintained to be more noble than an action in the field. But to negotiate is to exchange; and any influence brought to bear on Prussia in that manner must mean giving something up to Prussia to gain something from her.

What is it that we can give up to Prussia? Whatever it is, if it were a patch of African swamp, it would have stuck up over it like a notice-board the proclamation: "Bestowed by the Powers of Europe as a Reward for Invading Belgium."

G. K. Chesterton.

The level of reasoning reached by these luckless people may be inferred from the following: "If the breach of treaties were to be regarded as affording an excuse for war, international law would not diminish causes of war, but multiply them." In other words, there will be dignity in a law so long as nobody ever thinks of obeying it; but less dignity in the law if anybody even attempts to get it obeyed. If the law against assassination by poison were a law never put into force, this bright thinker would, I suppose, congratulate himself on not "multiplying" causes of litigation. There would certainly be fewer poison cases; only there would be more poisoning.

Yet, in the very next sentence, the writer flounders from the practical denial that international law can be enforced at all to the implication that it should be enforced with as much precision as private law. "Under private law," he says (I dispense with his absurd capital letters), "breach of contract is no excuse for murder."

Study that sentence: it is the picture of a mind. In private law breach of contract is always punished, by penalties which vary from the mildest, which is loss of all the advantages of the contract to the offending party. The reason we can punish it thus temperately and in proportion is, of course, that in private law we have all the parties in our hand; and by the ordinary pressure of police can secure the injured as much as he deserves or restrain the wrongdoer as far as we think fit. But we should inflict death if we could inflict nothing else, and if the only alternative were a universal repudiation of contracts.

Put the bargain-breaker in the position he holds as an armed Sovereign, and "murder" becomes the only thing we could do. Suppose each purchaser, after receiving a penny loaf and refusing to produce a penny, could shut himself up in a turret of steel from which it took military attack to dislodge him. That military attack would be undertaken. If it were not, the country would be conquered and ruled by an aristocracy of thieves. What this pamphleteer calls murder, what we call war, is what happens when the robber has a robber band and a robber-stronghold.

The outside of this piece of paper is much funnier than the inside. On the front is written in enormous scarlet letters, "Shall British Blood and Treasure Be Sacrificed for Nought?" To which the answer seems to be "No," with the obvious corollary that if there were an "immediate finish" they would have been sacrificed for nought. The back is better. It says, "Are You an Out-and-Outer?" and also, "Either Be a Militarist and and Say 'On With Carnage,' or Do Your Part to STOP THE WAR." It seems quite certain that there is no third course. So I think I will be a Militarist and I will say, "On With the Carnage" at intervals during the day. I hope this is being out-and-out; and it does not seem very difficult.

For the rest, there is the ignorant catchword about our being where we were last year, which is exactly what we are not, upon any argument. One might as well say so of a man who has lost his foot to avoid blood poisoning. Had there been no amputation he would be a perfect biped. He would also be a corpse.

There is only one thing about this pamphlet on which one can possibly be serious; and that is not only serious, but sad. Mr. C. H. Norman, whose name appears along with that of Mr. Duckers, is not a fool. He is a man who has often been right, and who has generally had something of the right spirit even when he was wrong. I will believe that he originally attacked tyranny out of real sympathy with the wrongs of the unfortunate and that he came to attack the patriotic tradition under the impression that it was a form of tyranny. What he calls militarism, I call self-defense; but I think he would have sincerely called it selfishness.

But what can we say of this "peace" except that it is almost literally a fatty degeneration of the heart? How can what was once generous end in such ghastly lack of generosity? How does an idealist come at last to things so spiritually squalid as the surrenders and betrayals advocated here? I cannot believe that Mr. Norman would treat two human companions, though they were escaped convicts laden with loathsome crimes, as England is recommended to treat France and Russia in this case. I cannot believe he would have any human being whom he could save with his own life under such smiling insult and victorious iniquity as this would leave the million human beings of Belgium.

The man who should carry out in practice the recommendations of this pamphlet would not be a Pacifist any more than a Militarist. He would be nothing so loyal as a German spy. He would be a coward; a man surrendering to power because it is powerful; a man deserting friends because they are in danger; a man disappointing the brokenhearted of the deliverance promised to them; a man praising the peace of a shambles and the "negotiations" of a slave-market—

Who would not laugh if such a man there be?
Who would not weep if Atticus were he?

Ferrero Defends England Against Italy's Discontent With Her New Ally

By Guglielmo Ferrero,
The Famous Italian Historian.

FOR about fifteen years, that is from the time England concluded the "entente" with France, the relations between England and Italy grew very cool. The Government at London in a few years had come to consider Italy as an almost negligible quantity, and little by little the Government of Rome had lost its former faith in the infallibility and invincibleness of England. So a friendship that for thirty years was esteemed eternal and indestructible by everyone seemed to fade away. But those who knew the political history of the nineteenth century had always looked on that friendship with a certain scepticism.

England, in fact, had only become the friend of Italy at the last hour—that is, after Magenta and Solferino. Until 1859 all England, Government and people, excepting a few idealistic, original poets, was most hostile to every idea of the unification of Italy, and had stood for Austria without reserve. When Austria was beaten in 1859 by Piedmont and France allied, when Garibaldi conquered the kingdom of the two Sicilies, in 1860, and the Piedmont army defeated the Papal States, England of a sudden was converted with a truly extraordinary zeal to the Italian cause. It was England that conquered the hesitancy of France in 1861 and induced her to recognize the new kingdom of Italy; it was England that after 1861 expressed her sympathy for the new State more than any other country. But for what reason? To create in the Mediterranean a rival to France, who was her greatest enemy.

The vaunted friendship of England for Italy had no other reason from 1860 to 1900. Naturally it became less as the reason that had generated it diminished. As the German danger grew on the oceans and on the Continent, England one fine day decided to make peace with France. She then had no further need of Italy, and straightway forgot its old friendship. Her newspapers and her statesmen occupied themselves no further with Italy; her writers began again to consider Italy as a museum; the relation between the two Governments became lukewarm. Worse still, they came to lack continuous contact.

But the European war has reunited the former friendship. Since declaring war on Austria, Italy has again become a great power even in the English opinion. The newspapers and statesmen of Great Britain vie with each other in celebrating the wisdom of the Italian Government, the valor of the army, the patriotic spirit of the people, and they predict the most glorious future for Italy. Great popular demonstrations salute the palace of our Ambassador in London every now and then. The Chancellor of the Exchequer went to Nice to meet the Italian Minister of France. In London and in Rome an Italo-English committee has been formed, and men of great renown have been enrolled as members. The reports between the two Governments now have all of their former cordiality.

England is again pleased with Italy. Can the same thing be repeated of Italy? Is she in her turn pleased with England?

It is needless to try to hide that in Italy, as in all the countries of the "entente" and in the neutral countries, there is a certain restlessness about that which concerns England. In Italy uneasiness is perhaps greater than in the other countries of Europe. This feeling is born of the slowness with which England is proceeding to organize the new army, the famous army of Lord Kitchener, that is counted on together with the French army to drive the Germans out of Belgium. It is said over and over that except for things appertaining to finance, England is the weak spot of the Quadruple Alliance, that there is too much talk about her famous army, and its effects are too little seen; that the masses in England have not yet been able to understand what the European war really is; that the miners and workingmen in England have conducted themselves in a scandalous manner, even going so far as to strike and refusing to renounce any of their former priviledges when the enemy is at the door; that England is the power that has spoken in the highest tone from the first, threatening Germany with extermination, and she has acted less than the others.

The undertaking at the Dardanelles, claimed and directed by England, was begun in a light way, without proper preparation; it has cost a great number of lives and is only going along fairly well . . . It is not difficult to find people in Italy to-day who shake their heads even when the British fleet is spoken of.

"On the day of trial will it be worthy of its fame?" many ask.

These things are openly said in Italy in political meeting places, in newspaper offices, in private conversation. The newspapers are more discreet because they don't want to discourage the public; but hints of bad humor and criticism are easy to discern, here and there, even in the press. What is there of truth in these complaints, then, and in what respect are they unjust?

That the English Admiralty made a mistake in the valuation of the difficulties of the undertaking at the Straits of the Dardanelles, and that these errors had serious consequences cannot be contradicted. Neither can it be denied that the English workmen have comported themselves in a way to justify pain and irritate the allies of England. The recent miners' strike in Wales, for example, is a real crime against Europe and a sort of unconscious betrayal of the cause of the allies. So, also, the difficulties with the workmen encountered by the British Government to obtain the necessary quantities of war munitions, the allies of England have been much surprised and disappointed—and no wonder. All the nations are risking their very existence in this war, and it is no time to foolishly cut the capers that are permitted in times of peace.

The complaints about the slowness with which the organization of the new British army is proceeding seem very unjust to me. It is certain that England has now enrolled more than two millions of soldiers, some say the number is absolutely three millions, although that number seems too large. When we think that these two millions of soldiers have enlisted voluntarily, without being compelled as they are on the Continent by the military obligations, it cannot be denied that at least a part of Great Britain has taken the war seriously and that those who constitute this part are resolved to do as much as they can toward helping their country to pay its part in the terrible sacrifice of blood that destiny has demanded of the peoples of the Old World. I do not know if the other countries of Europe could have found such a number of volunteers for a war that is not one of direct defense, the scope of which is to maintain the prestige of the nation and defend it more against a future danger than a present one. It is plainly seen why it was easier for England to find two million soldiers than to arm them, for to arm them to-day time is necessary.

Italy especially should be able to easily understand this so-called slowness, because she has something with which to compare it. One year ago Italy was more prepared to make the effort she is now making against Austria than England is to-day to undertake that which she wants to and must do. Italy has put under arms an army that is smaller than the one England is preparing. Now, Italy took ten months to get her army ready, and all authorities say that she would have done well to have waited two months longer, to put in more perfect condition the preparation of all the details.

If a year was needed then for Italy to get through with the preparation of a smaller army, why be surprised that England needs a year to create, out of nothing, a more numerous army than hers?

The accusation is unjust. We cannot ask the impossible even of England. Every once in a while some journal—in Italy or in France—tells the public so; and the better informed and more sensible people repeat it as often as they can in the lively discussions that go on in private on this subject. But these efforts are useless. The public is and will be dissatisfied. The reason for this is simple. The retard of the English army, inevitable and natural as it may be, prolongs the war. The longer the war lasts the more its ruin in lives and treasure is increased. So the public, overwrought with terrible anxieties and innumerable causes of sorrow and suffering, caused by this internal war, takes it out on England and accuses that country of slowness and weakness. So it will not be wondered at if England comes out of the conflict diminished in the world's opinion, no matter how the war may go.

Unless she succeeds in making the uncertainty of the beginning disappear by some grand success, Europe entire will judge England at the end of the war, as it now judges her—that she has shown herself weak, irresolute, vacillating, and that when everything is counted up she received more help from the allies than she gave them.

This judgment would certainly be unjust, as it does not take into account the truly great effort England is now making. But there would be some element of justice in it, too, given the way England allowed herself to be surprised while asleep. Because England is doing something now doesn't excuse her for what she failed to do in the ten preceding years. To be sure, no State in Europe foresaw or could have foreseen the inhuman upheaval we are now witnessing, but no State cradled itself so stupidity as England with the illusion that no serious danger threatened the peace of Europe and with that peace her own fortune.

England committed a serious error, and will go down before history as having committed it: she did not understand from the time that Germany began to build an immense navy that she had to reinforce her army on land.

She should have replied to the attempts of Germany to rival her dominion of the seas by creating a strong army to send on the Continent to fight the Germans on land. Lord Roberts had foreseen the future. He spoke the great word, but the people did not understand him—and did not follow him, because England believed that Germany would not provoke the European war.

Even if at the end of the war she will have to suffer the diminution of prestige of which we already see the first signs, England can thank fortune that the errors of others saved her from a far greater danger. This mistake of the other nations that has been providential for the English Empire and that has prolonged its existence perhaps for another century, was the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine that the German people rather than the German Government demanded in 1871, because, drunk with victory, they wished to inflict a supreme humiliation on France.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Cosmopolitan readers will be deeply absorbed in the new Chambers serial. It is the love-story of a remarkable girl and a brave man which begins in one of the most dramatic moments of history and develops under circumstances tense with excitement and danger. We refer to those stirring days immediately preceding the mighty clash of European nations and their sequel in the period of whirlwind invasion by the hosts of the German Emperor. The chief characters are non-combatants, but fate compels them to play mysterious and unexpected parts in the events of the war.

ON the 28th of June, 1914, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, was murdered by a Serb in Serajevo. The murder was the most momentous crime ever [illegible] in the world.

Incidentally, it vitally affected the life and career of the girl Philippa.

Before the press of the United States received the news, the British ambassador had been notified of the tragedy, and a few minutes later he was in secret conference with the President. He informed the President that, in his opinion, war before midsummer had now become inevitable.

Before the ambassador left, it was understood that certain secret negotiations should be immediately concluded, among other matters the question of the requisition of the Harkness shell.

This, then, was the condition of affairs in the United States when on the 19th of July, the British ambassador was informed that the plans and formula for the Harkness shell had been abstracted.

Five hours after the information had reached the ambassador, two young men stepped aboard the Antwerp liner Zeeduyne a few seconds before the gangway was pulled up. They were nice-looking young men. They carried tennis bats, and it was rumored very [illegible] on board that they were two celebrated New Zealand tennis champions on their way to the international tournament at Ostend.

The ocean being on its best behavior, nearly everybody [illegible] triumphantly on deck. There were, however, several [illegible] maintained exclusiveness in their staterooms, and [illegible] two German gentlemen who preferred to [illegible] common.

Evidently they were commercial gentlemen, for they [illegible] wireless messages to [illegible] during the voyage [illegible] a code of their own which seemed to concern perfumes and cosmetics and, in particular, a toilet soap known as "Calypso soap." In return, they received several wireless messages, all mentioning the toilet soap known as "Calypso soap." And a copy of every code message which they dispatched or received was sent to the captain of the Zeeduyne, and he always handed these copies to the tennis champions of New Zealand.

As the Zeeduyne steamed into the Scheldt, several thousand miles away, in the city of Washington, the French ambassador telegraphed in cipher to his government that the secret plans and formula for the Harkness shell, which had been acquired by England from the United States Government, had been stolen. Immediately, from the military intelligence department in Paris, orders were telegraphed and letters sent to thousands of individuals of every description and station in life to be on the alert. Among others who received such letters was a denationalized individual named [illegible] Wildresse, who kept a cabaret in the little town of Ausone. The cabaret was called the Cafe de [illegible]. When Wildresse received the letter, he went into the bedroom of the girl Philippa, who was standing before her looking-glass busily rouging her cheeks and painting her lips.

"If they come our way, Philippa," growled Wildesse, "play the baby—do you hear? In other words, be yourself."

"That is not difficult," the girl Philippa replied. "When I lose my innocence, then it will mean real acting."

Wildresse glared at her. "When you lose it, eh?" he repeated. "Well, when you do, I'll break your neck."

The girl was now busy with her beautiful chestnut hair. Wildresse's pock-marked features softened. "Allons," he said, in his harsh voice. "I have no fears. Besides, you are where I have my eye on you."

"If I am what I am, it is because I prefer it, not on account of your 'eye,'" she said listlessly.

"Is that so?" he roared. "All the same, continue to prefer virtue and good conduct, and I'll continue to use my two eyes. And if any strangers come into the cafe, keep your eyes on them—do you hear?"

"I hear," said the girl Philippa. The web of fate had settled over her at last.

About that time the steamer Zeeduyne was docking at Antwerp. Two hours later, two German gentlemen in a hurry registered at the Hotel St. Antoine in the Place Verte, and were informed that they were expected immediately in room 23. A page conducted them to the room; they thanked him and sent him back for their luggage. Then both German gentlemen knocked and were admitted. The next instant there came a crash, a heavy fall, dull sounds of feet scuffling behind the locked door—then silence.

When the boy came back with the hand-luggage, Halkett bade him leave it outside the door for the present. Later, Gray cautiously opened the door and drew in the luggage.

Ten minutes later both young men came leisurely out of the room, locking the door on the outside. They each carried hand-luggage. Both departed in a cab. At the railroad station, however, an unusually generous stranger offered Gray a motorcycle for nothing. So he strapped his bag to it and departed.

Halkett bought a ticket to Maestricht, Holland, which he had no idea of using, and presently came out of the station and walked eastward rather rapidly. A man who also had bought a ticket for Maestricht rose from his seat in the waiting room and walked stealthily after him, making a signal to another man. This second man immediately stepped into a station telephone booth and called up room 23 at the Hotel St Antoine, where two German gentlemen, badly battered, were now conferring with a third German gentleman, who had gone to room 23, knocked until out of patience, and had then summoned the maitre d'hotel who unlocked the door with a master-key.

Which operation revealed two German gentlemen flat on their backs, very carefully tied up with rope and artistically gagged. This unbattered gentleman now conversed over the telephone with the man at the railroad station. A few moments later, he and the two battered ones left the hotel hastily in a taxicab, joined the man at the railroad station, and drove rapidly eastward. And before forty-eight hours had elapsed each one of these four men, operating in pairs, had attempted to kill the young man named Halkett. Twice he got away. The third time two of them succeeded in locating him in the little town of Diekirch.

And all the while the invisible net of destiny in which he now found himself entangled was enmeshing in its widening spread new people every minute, whose fate was to be linked with his, and who had never even heard of him. Among them was the girl Philippa.

II.

A narrow-gauge railroad track runs through the woods from Diekirch connecting the two main lines; and on the deserted wooden platform beside this track stood Halkett, his suitcase in one hand, the other hand in his side pocket, awaiting the shuttle train.

The young man's anxiety was presently justified, for two men crept out from behind separate trees in the forest directly behind the platform, he turned around only in time to obtain a foreshortened and dis ing view of the muzzle of a revolver.

Hands up!" began the man behind the weapon; but as he was in ery act of saying it a jet of ammonia entered his mouth through econd button of Halkett's waistcoat, and he reeled backward off the orm and fell into the grass lready Halkett and the other man had clinched—the former raining on the latter's countenance, which proceeding so bewildered him he could not find the revolver in his side pocket. It was an auto-, and Halkett finally got hold of it and hurled it into the woods. he continued the terrible beating which he was administering.

Get out!" he said in German to the battered man, still battering "Get out, or I'll kill you!"

le hit him another cracking blow, turned and wrested the other from the writhing man on the grass, whirled around, and went at attered one again. "I've had enough of this!" he breathed heavily. l you I'll kill you if you bother me again! I could do it now—but o much like murder if you're not in uniform!"

he man on the grass had managed to evade suffocation; he got up and staggered off toward the woods, and Halkett drove his com n after him at the point of his own revolver.

s he stood on the edge of the wooden platform, the toy like le of an approaching train broke the hot July stillness. Before it ed, he hurled the remaining revolver into the woods across the ; then, as the train drew up for him, he cast a last keen glance forest behind him. Nothing stirred there, not even a leaf ut before the train had been under way five minutes, a bulle red the glass of the window beside which he had been seated. e rode the remainder of the journey flat on his back, smoking ttes and wondering whether they'd get him at last, and, what was nitely greater importance, a thin, long envelope which he carried ed inside his undershirt. It was the contents of this envelope mattered, not his life. The main thing was to get that envelope s contents to London omebody at Warner's elbow spoke to him in French. He turned ad in a leisurely manner. A well dressed young fellow, evidently glishman, was standing beside him in the noisy, market day crowd

Pardon, monsieur, are you English?"

American, replied Warner briefly

My name is Halkett, said the other, with a quick smile. "I'm Eng nd I'm in trouble. Could you spare me a moment?

he features of the American expressed boredom to the point of un tly indifference The Englishman looked at him, perplexed for a nt, then his sun bronzed face lighted up

You're quite mistaken," he said. "I don't expect the classic remit from England, and I don't require the celebrated twenty-franc [illegible] t arrives. [illegible] tell you what I need - rather desperately?"

Yes, if you choose need a friend'

Well, go ahead

Thanks, I will But can't we get out of this crowd?"

houlder to shoulder, they threaded their way through the crowded et square, amid the clatter of sabots, the lowing of cattle, the in nt bleating of sheep.

What species of trouble are you in?" asked Warner, when they had into a quieter part of the town

I can't tell you what the trouble is," Halkett said; "I may only ou to help me a bit I've a long thin envelope in my pocket. I'd o have you take it from me and slip it into your breast pocket and button your coat' aid the American, amused and surprised.

Can't you tell me what is in the envelope?"

And why do you purpose to trust me with it?" continued Warner uly.

Halkett looked up with his quick and winning smile. "I'll take that

Why? You don't know me'

I had a good look at you in the market square before I spoke to

Oh, you think you are a psychologist?'

Of sorts."

Still"—Warner glanced amusedly at Halkett—"that scarcely ex- your rather unusual request. Why should I take charge of your ope?"

My dear fellow, I can't answer that. Still I may say this much. ard put to it Some chaps want to get the envelope away from me— u see?"

Well, why don't you appeal to the police?" demanded Warner y.

Halkett's quick smile broke out "My dear chap," he said, "I'd do so ere in England. I can't, as matters stand. The French police are e to me."

Why don't you go to your consulate?"

I did. The consul is away on his vacation. And I didn't like the of his vice-consul, or his name either. "His name is Schmidt."

Warner laughed and Halkett looked up. "I'm queer, I admit it. But ght to have come to some conclusion concerning me by this time."

Warner laughed again "I'll take a chance on you," he said. "Give our envelope"

IV.

Halkett cast a rapid glance around him. Then he whipped out from ocket a long, thin envelope, and passed it to Warner, who immedi slipped it into the breast pocket of his coat.

That's very decent of you," said Halkett, in a low voice. "What is name?"

I had better write it out for you"

No. If things go wrong with me, I don't want your name and ad- discovered in my pockets"

Warner looked at him rather gravely for a moment, then: "James er is my name. I'm a painter. My present address is Sais."

By any chance," asked Halkett, are you the military painter, James r?"

I am."

I knew you were right!" exclaimed Halkett. "Any man who paints ay you paint must be right!"

Warner smiled, then his features altered. "Listen, Halkett," he said; e tried to size you up, and I can't. You look to me like a soldier. ay, I've concluded that you're straight. Can't I do more for you than an envelope about for you?"

That's very decent of you, Warner. No, thanks; there is nothing

But you are likely to get into a row."

I am; but I don't know when or where"

Where are you stopping in Ausone?"

At the Boule d'Argent."

Warner said. "I came into town to buy canvases and colors Let us back to the hotel."

cross the esplanade there was a crowd around the Cafe de Biribi— e constantly passing to and fro—and strains of lively music leaked om within. "I've never been in there," Warner remarked, "but I've s intended to go. It's kept by a rascal named Wildresse—a sporting fight promoter, and an ex gambler."

hey found the cabaret crowded when they went in. Old man Wil- e roamed furtively in the background, his gorilla arms behind his his blunt fingers interlocked, keeping a sly and ratty eye on waiters uests, and sometimes on the young woman cashier who lounged list- upon her high chair behind the wire cage. The moment that and Halkett appeared in the doorway, Wildresse crossed the floor and whispered to his cashier

"It's one of those men. Schmidt's description might fit either. Go over and join them anyway. I want you to pump them dry. Do you hear?"

"Yes, I hear" Her indifferent gray eyes, sweeping the hall, presently rested on Warner

Halkett was saying: "You know that girl—the cashier, I mean—is extraordinarily pretty" Warner turned

"I've been looking at her. She's rather thickly tinted, isn't she?"

"Yes—but in spite of the paint. She has a charmingly shaped head. Some day she'll have a figure."

"There's a certain appeal about her. It's odd, isn't it?—the subtle something about some women that attracts," continued Warner. "It doesn't depend on beauty at all" Halkett sipped his iced Moselle wine

No; it doesn't depend on beauty, on intelligence, on character, or on morals. It's in spite of them—in defiance, sometimes. Now, take that thin, young girl over there; her lips and cheeks are painted; she has the disenchanted, detached glance of the too early wise. The chances are that she isn't respectable. And in spite of all that, Warner well—look at her!"

"I see A man could paint a troubling portrait of her—a sermon on canvas"

"Just as she sits there," nodded Halkett

"Just as she sits there, chin on palm, one lank leg crossed over the other and her slim foot dangling. Yes, in spite of rouge and other obvious elementals, I should paint her as she really is, Halkett, and no man in his heart would dare doubt her after I'd finished

"That's not realism," remarked Halkett

"It's the vital essence of it. You know—I'm something of a gambler Well, if I painted that girl as she sits there now, with the artificial tint on lip and cheek—if I painted her just as she appears to us, and in all the insolently youthful relaxation of her attitude—I'd be gambling all the while with myself that the soul inside her is as clean as a flame What do you think of that view of her?"

"As you Americans say, you're some poet," observed Halkett laughingly

The cabaret was a noisy place a group of Summer touring students from Louvain, across the border, were singing "La Brabanconne"

"Philippa!" cried one of the students, hammering on the table with his beer glass. "Come out from behind your guichet and dance with me!"

The girl's gray eyes turned superciliously toward the speaker. The young man blew a kiss toward her. Old man Wildresse, who was prowling near, tapped him on the shoulder

"No fooling!" he growled

"I merely desired the honor of dancing with your charming cashier"

"Allons! Enough! It's sufficient to ask her, isn't it? A woman dances with whom she chooses." And grumbling, he walked on to the table where Warner and Halkett were seated. Then, addressing them. "Well, gentlemen," he said in English, "are you amusing yourselves?"

"Sufficiently," nodded Warner

Old Wildresse peeped stealthily over his shoulder Then his very small black eyes stole toward Halkett. "Jour de fete," he remarked, in his harshly resonant voice. "Do you gentlemen dine here this evening?"

"I think not," said Warner

"I am sorry it will be gay. There are dance-partners to be had for a polite bow. You should see my little cashier yonder! She can dance. But I don't permit her to dance very often Only a special client, now and then"

"May we consider ourselves special clients?" inquired Warner, amused

"Oh, I don't say yes, and I don't say no. It all depends on her. She dances with whom she pleases."

"She's very pretty," said Halkett

"Others have said so before you"

And he shuffled away, his heavy head bent sideways, his hands tightly clasped behind him

"There's an evil type," remarked Halkett.

"With his cropped head and his smooth, pasty face, and those unpleasant black eyes of his, he looks like an ex-convict," Warner said, then looked up with a laugh. "Halkett, I'm going over to ask that girl to dance."

"All right, I'll hold the table," said the Englishman, amused

V.

Warner sauntered over to the cashier's desk and made a very nice and thoroughly Continental bow to the girl behind it. He said in French

"Would mademoiselle do me the honor of dancing this dance with me?"

She replied in a sweet but indifferent voice: "Monsieur is too amiable. But he sees that I am cashier of the establishment He must ask Monsieur Wildresse if I may dance with him"

"He suggested that I ask you."

"Very well—if it's a matter of business"

Warner laughed. "Don't you ever dance for pleasure?" he asked in English.

She replied in English. "Is it your theory that it would give me pleasure to dance with you?"

"It is," he said, still laughing

The girl drew a pencil from her hair, rapped with it on the counter A head waiter came speeding to her. "Aristide, I'm going to dance," she said. "Have the goodness to sit in my chair until I return or Melanie arrives"

She slid to the floor from her high seat, came out through the wire gate, and began to unpin her cambric apron. The closer view revealed to him her thinness in her black gown. She was not as tall as he had thought her, and she was younger; but he had been right about her cheeks and lips. Both were outrageously painted

She handed her daintily embroidered apron to the waiter, laid one hand lightly on Warner's arm; he led her to the edge of the dancing floor, clasped her waist, and swung her with him out into the noisy whirl beyond: The orchestra ceased playing after a few minutes, but old man Wildresse, who had been watching them, growled: "Go on!" and the music recommenced. When it ceased she was breathing only a trifle faster, and her cheeks under the paint glowed softly pink.

"Could you join us?" Warner asked.

"I'd like to—yes."

So he took her back to the table, where Halkett rose and paid his respects gracefully and they seated themselves and ordered a grenadine for her.

Halkett said. "Mr. Warner and I have been discussing an imaginary portrait of you."

"What?" The clear gray eyes turned questioningly to him, to Warner. The latter nodded. "I happen to be a painter. Mr. Halkett and I have agreed that it would be an interesting experiment to paint your portrait—as you really are."

The girl seemed slightly puzzled. "As I really am?" she repeated "But messieurs, am I not what you see before you?"

She played with the stem of her glass and stirred the ice in it with her broken wheat straw. "So you are a painter," she said, her gray eyes fixed absently on her glass. "Are you a distinguished painter, monsieur?"

He laughed. "You'll have to ask others that question, Philippa."

She thought a moment, then: "Mr. Halkett," she asked, in English, "is Mr. Warner a distinguished painter?"

Halkett laughed. "One of the most celebrated American painters of the day!"

The Louvain students had become very noisy.

"They are tiresome!" exclaimed Philippa, turning to Warner. "Let us walk down to the river and sit in one of our boats. I should really like to talk to you sensibly—unless you are too much annoyed with me."

So they rose; Warner paid the bill, and, with a whimsical smile at Halkett, walked out beside Philippa through one of the rear doors, and immediately found himself in brightest sunshine. Here, under the pitiless sky, the girl's face became ghastly under its rouged mask They walked down the grassy slope to the river bank, where rows of boats lay moored There was a white punt there called the Lys. Philippa stepped into it, drew a key from her pocket, unlocked the padlock Then, lifting the pole from the grass, she turned and invited Warner with a gesture He tossed the chain aboard, stepped in, and offered to take the pole. Philippa evidently desired to do the punting herself; so he sat back, watching her

After a few [illegible] turning from her pole: "Do you not find it agreeable?" she asked

"Certainly. What little river is this we're floating on?"

"The Recolette"

"It flows by Sais, too"

"You know Sais then?"

"I live there in Summer."

"Oh—and in winter?"

"Paris"

An unconscious sigh of relief escaped her—that it was not necessary to play the spy with this man. It was the other man who interested Wildresse. [illegible] paddled on in silence for a while, then deftly guided the Lys into the cool green shadow of a huge oak

"The sun is warm," she remarked, driving in the pole and tying the white punt. She came and seated herself by Warner

"Do you know," he said, "I've never before done this for pleasure?"

"What haven't you done for pleasure?"

"This which I'm doing"

"You mean you never before went out punting with a customer?"

Not for the pleasure of it—only for business reasons

He hesitated to understand, refused to, because he could not believe her to be merely a fille de cabaret. "What is your business?" he asked

"Cashier, of course"

"Well, does your business ever take you boating with customers? Is it part of your business to dance with a customer and drink grenadines with him?"

"Yes, but you don't understand"—— And suddenly she comprehended his misunderstanding of her and blushed deeply

"I am not a cocotte. Did you think I meant that?

I know you are not"

There was a silence "It happened this way," she said quietly "I didn't want to make it a matter of business with you You please me. Why shouldn't I amuse myself for an hour with a client who pleases me?"

"Are you doing it?"

"Yes I never before knew a distinguished painter—only noisy boys from the schools, whose hair is uncut, whose conversation is blague and whose trousers are too baggy to suit me. They smoke soldier's tobacco and their subjects of discussion are not always convenable"

He said curiously: "As for that, you must hear much that is not convenable in the cabaret"

"Oh, yes. I don't notice it when it is not addressed to me. Please tell me what you paint—if I am permitted to ask?"

"Soldiers. Portraits also, sometimes, and landscapes out-of-doors Do pictures interest you?"

I used to go to the Louvre and the Luxembourg when I was a child. Did you say that you would like to make a portrait of me?"

I said that if I were going to paint you, I'd paint you as you really are"

"I don't understand," she said

"Well, then, if I were going to paint you I'd ask you to wash your cheeks" She sat silent dumb, [illegible]

And he continued pleasantly "after your face had been well scrubbed I'd paint you in your black gown, cuffs and apron of a cashier, just as I first saw you there behind the desk. But behind your eyes, which looked out so tranquilly across the tumult of the cabaret, I'd paint a soul as clean as a flame. I'm wondering whether I'd make any mistake in painting you that way, Philippa?"

The girl Philippa had fixed her gray eyes on him with troubled intensity They remained so for a while after he had finished speaking

Presently, and partly to herself, she said: "Pour ça—yes. So far But it has never before occurred to me that I look like a cocotte." She turned, and resting one arm on the gunwale, gazed down into the green water "Have you a fresh handkerchief?" she asked, not turning toward him

"Yes but"——

"Please" I must wash my face

She bent swiftly, dipped both hands into the water, and scrubbed her lips and cheeks. Then, extending her arm behind her for the handkerchief, she dried her skin. There now remained only the faintest tint of color under her clear, cool skin.

"You see," she said. "I am not attractive unless I help nature."

On the contrary, you are exceedingly attractive."

"But I have several freckles near to my nose. And I am pale.

Another punt passed between them; she looked after it absently Presently she said, still watching the receding boat

"Do you think you'll ever come again to the Cafe de Biribi?"

I'll come expressly to see you, Philippa."

To his surprise, the girl blushed vividly and looked away from him, and he hastily took a different tone

"When I'm in Ausone again," he said, seriously, "I'll bring with me a canvas and brushes. I'll make a little study of you. Do you think Monsieur Wildresse would permit it?"

I do what I choose"

"Oh!"

She misunderstood his amused exclamation, and she flushed up

My conduct has been good—so far," she explained. "Everybody knows it. The prix de la rosiere is not yet beyond me. If a girl determines to behave otherwise, who can stop her and what? No, it is understood between Monsieur Wildresse and me that I do what I choose. And, monsieur, so far I have not chosen—indiscreetly."

I didn't mean"——

"I understand. You think that it is more comme il faut to exhibit one's freckles to the world than to paint them out."

"It's a thousand times better! If you only knew how pretty you are!"

"Monsieur"—— The girl's rising color and her low-voiced exclamation warned him again that detached and quite impersonal praises from him were not understood.

"Philippa," he explained, with bored but smiling reassurance, "I am not trying to make love to you. Also, I would not offend you by talking to you about love."

Folding and unfolding her hands, and looking down at them, she said

"Apropos of love—I have never been angry because men told me they were in love with me. Men love; it's natural; they cannot help it. So, if you had said so, I should not have been angry."

"Philippa," he said, smilingly, "when a girl and a man happen to be alone together, love isn't the only entertaining subject for conversation is it?"

"It's the subject I've always had to listen to from men You speak differently to me. Are other American men like you?"

"You ought to know. Aren't you American?"

"I don't know what I am."

"Then Monsieur Wildresse isn't a relation?"

"No. I wear his name—for lack of any other He found me somewhere, he says—in Paris, I believe. That is all he will tell me He sent me to school in England until I was sixteen. After that I became cashier for him"

"Is he kind to you?

"He has never struck me"

"Does he protect you?"

"He uses me in business. I am too valuable to misuse"

The girl looked down at her folded hands. And even Warner divined what ultimate chances she stood in the Cabaret de Biribi

"When I'm in Ausone again I'll come to see you" he said pleasantly "Not to make love to you, Philippa," he added, with a smile "but just because we have become such good friends out here in the Lys

When Warner and the girl Philippa returned to Cabaret de Biribi together the uproar had become almost deafening. Philippa entered the cashier's enclosure and dismissed the woman in charge. Old man Wildresse sidled up to the desk, opened the wicket and went inside. "Eh bien!" he growled. "Nothing?"

"Nothing."

"Drop that glass and talk!" he said harshly. She turned and looked at him.

"I tell you it was silly to suspect such a man," she said impatiently "In my heart I feel humiliated that you should have sent me to spy on him"——

"What's that?"

"No; I've had enough! I don't like the role; I never liked it! Are there no police in France"——

"Little idiot!" he said. "Will you hold your tongue! We've got to do what the Government tells us to do, haven't we?"

"Not I! Never again——"

"Yes, you will! Do you hear? Yes, you will, or I'll twist your neck Now, I'm going to keep my eye on that other gentleman. Granted that the man you pumped is all right, I'm not so sure about the other, who seems to be an Englishman. I'm going over to stand near him By and by I'll address him And if I wink at you, leave your caisse with Melanie come over and sit at their table again"——

"No!"

"Yes, you will. And you'll also contrive it so the Englishman asks you to dance. Do you hear what I say? And you'll find out where he comes from, and when he arrived in Ausone, and where he is going, and whatever else you can worm out of him. He glared at her. "Disobey if you dare," he added

"I—I've done enough—filthy work"—— Philippa stammered "Why must I? I have never done anything wrong"——

"Did you hear what I said?" And he clasped his hands behind his back, peered sideways at her, and went shuffling out of the enclosure

Groups at various tables were singing and shouting; the floor seethed with sweating dancers. On the edge of this vortex the girl Philippa from her high chair, looked across the tumult toward the table where Warner and Halkett sat. Presently she saw that they were preparing to leave. They summoned the waiter paid the reckoning, rose, and walked leisurely toward the door

At the cashier's desk they turned aside to say good night to Philippa The girl looked up from her accounts, pencil poised, gazing at Warner

"Au revoir, Philippa," he said, smilingly. The girl's serious features relaxed; she nodded to him gayly, turned, still smiling, to include Halkett And instantly a swift change altered her face, she half rose from her chair, arm outstretched. "What is that man doing behind you?" she cried out—too late to avert what she saw coming. For a man who had come up close behind Halkett had dexterously passed a silk handkerchief across his throat from behind and had jerked him backward, and, like lightning two other men appeared on either side of him, tore his coat wide and thrust their hands into his breast pockets

Fashion Oddities Are Being Featured in the New Neck and Sleeve

Velvets in Bright Colors Are Hand Embroidered

I[illegible] the details of the Paris [illegible] very [illegible] ions [illegible] Spring [illegible] short [illegible] bodice [illegible]

In [illegible] made [illegible] redingote [illegible] Georgette is among those who has contrived a three-piece [illegible] coat reaches quite to the hem of the skirt and is trimmed with three-inch bands of [illegible]. The idea is pretty, but [illegible] that of the [illegible].

In the [illegible] short [illegible] that [illegible] in its pre[illegible] the wa[illegible] type is [illegible] in the [illegible] blouse, of which there are many examples, but [illegible] may be considered as a short coat constructed on "vague" lines.

In deta[illegible] may be said that greatest interest lies in the neck and the sleeve finish. The latter are undoubtedly [illegible] toward increased width, [illegible] a widening, but the inte[illegible] of great [illegible]s that hang from a fitted shoulder [illegible]ette. Naturally this inclination is best expressed in the gowns, but its effect on suits is evident on certain of the imported models that have a bishop type of sleeve.

LARGE SLEEVES APPEAR.

[illegible], for example, has advanced [illegible] sleeves measure fully [illegible] quarters of a yard across. The upper part of the figure is kept [illegible] because the shoulders are extended to form a fitted cap for the wide arm covering. In a gown of gorgeous Garibaldi red velvet Jenny shows such a sleeve. The skirt is short and wide and has embroidery tracings of gold threads about the bottom. The kimono shoulder serves as a point from which to hang the great puff sleeve, which is not more than three-quarters length and is confined by bands of gold ribbons. These same bands in triple arrangement compose the girdle.

The use of color is marked in the Paris collections that have reached these shores. Not only the bright reds, but beautiful purple velvet and satin, deep yellow and rose pink are all included. In fact, there are fewer white evening gowns among the Paris models than for many years back.

Still More Novelties in Footwear

A[illegible] novelties for footwear [illegible] consistently along [illegible]. The latest is the silk hose [illegible] black, encircled about [illegible] where the top of the shoe [illegible] with three narrow flounces of the stocking fabric edged with black embroidery, or in the case of the black hose, with white embroidery. These flounces overlap each other and when worn with a [illegible] give a modified pantalette suggestion.

By way of relieving the plainness of the new high shoes there is a model of black leather with what may be termed a double fastening. This occurs directly down the centre of the shoe, the scalloped edge of the regular fastening being outlined with white kid and this decorative treatment being repeated on the other side of the seam. Each scallop is adorned with a white button and at the top there is posed a black silk tassel.

The cuff of fur is likely to be popular as a shoe top garniture. These cuffs are detachable and the fur may match that of the scarf or muff. If a woman be weathly she must have shoe cuffs to correspond with the various fur sets for afternoon or evening wear. This fad is an outgrowth of the Russian boot style of last Winter.

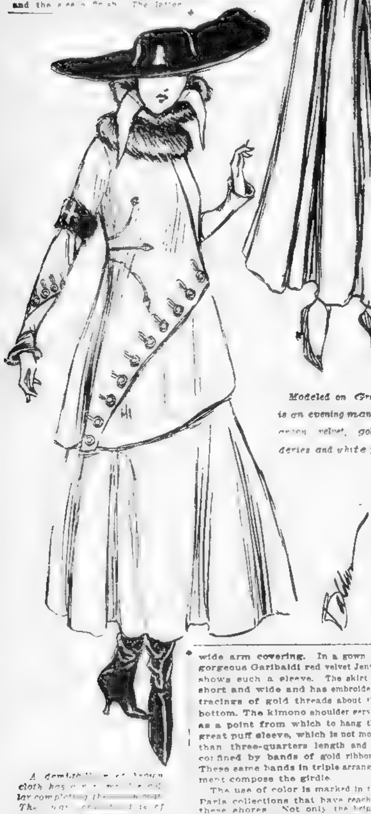
Suit Adapted from a Jenny Model

A SUIT that has served as inspiration for American [illegible] is a Jenny model which [illegible] full skirt and a modified Russian blouse. The high collar is [illegible] effect and is faced with [illegible] yellow, which contrasts well with the marine blue of the cloth. A unique feature of this suit is the introduction of tiny thumb pockets in the belt of the skirt. Like most of Jenny's models, this suit is very youthful and wearable.

A lot of worsted embroidery decorates early suits. Sometimes the embroidery is in monotone, as in a suit of Cobalt blue, embroidered in pearl gray and trimmed with krimmer fur. However, there are instances of black velvet suits done in colored worsteds and combined with dark furs. A striking model is of white satin for the skirt, and black velvet for the coat. In fact, this combination promises to be just as good throughout the Winter as it has been during the past three or four months.

A good deal of attention is being given to the Fall sport suit. Sometimes it is intended for hiking or for week-end visits out of town, where golf and tennis constitute part of the entertainment. Of course such suits follow tailored lines and are made of serviceable fabrics. In many instances the skirts and coats are of different material and contrasting colors.

Following such suits there are models designed for skating. These costumes, however, may be worn for other purposes, since they are of smart [illegible] tweeds or crossbar worsteds, combined with velvet or fur. Speaking generally, the skirts are shoe top length and the coats vary from hip length to three-quarters. Because of the [illegible] pattern interesting lines are achieved by cutting the peplum bias or by inserting ring shaped pieces on the hip to accentuate the flare.



A demi-tailleur of brown cloth has a [illegible] collar completing the [illegible]. The [illegible] is of sealskin and [illegible]

Notables in Horse Show and Polo at Myopia

By BETTY BOSTON.

Twenty-one years' allegiance to the horse as a clever and handsome beast on the sporting field, was exemplified at the Labor Day Show of the Myopia Hunt Club. The day was an ideal one.

There was a large list of notable entrants despite the fact that Newport's big horse show was held on the same day.

As the show was complimentary to the general public fully 10,000 people, it is said, spent the day at the polo practice field. Special trains were run to Hamilton. Automobile parties were numerous.

The spectators remained for a very exciting polo game between Dedham and Devon, that aroused great enthusiasm. Here again two shifts of handsome polo ponies appeared on the field. When it is estimated that a polo pony costs all the way from $1,000 to $2,500 you may be assured that some very fleet, valuable and dapper animals were shown, both in that class of the show and as the mounts for the Devon and Dedham players.

Miss Eleonora Sears exhibited her "Babette" and "Me, Too" in the polo pony class, as did Childs Frick his "Colonial" and "Kitten." Others who had polo pony entries were Conover Fitch, Thomas W. Pierce, J. R. Moulton and C. A. Munn and E. W. Hoppin and C. A. Devon polo team.

Miss Sears also entered "Babette," "Me Too" and "Joe Ross" in the saddle class for junior riders.

The show opened at 10 a. m., with jumpers for junior riders. The stables of C. G. Rice, James P. Mandell and H. M. Bohlen of Philadelphia and Ipswich were represented.

At 10 20 a. m. saddle horses for junior riders were shown the exhibitors being C. G. Rice, James P. and George S. Mandell, Charles F. Ayer, H. M. Bohlen, Herbert M. Mason, Charles F. Ayer, George G. and J. H. Snowden of Indianapolis, who have the Hanks estate at West Manchester, Miss Eleanor Seavey of Boston and Hamilton and Miss Eleonora Sears.

The Abbot cup for hunters brought out contests by horses of that class owned by John S. Lawrence, George von L. Meyer, Frederick Ayer, Jr., C. G. Rice, G. S. Mandell, C. F. Ayer, Durell Hall, B. Tuckerman, Jr., and Clement Bernheimer.

For the show of qualified hunters, Mrs. William H. Coolidge, Jr. (Eleanor Cole), a bride of Wednesday, showed "Chorus Girl;" Miss Mary Curtis, "Seamstress"; Mrs. George Burroughs, "Raven and Topsy", the Misses Anna Agassiz and Elsie Ames, "Miss Maud" and "I Hamin," respectively.

Other exhibitors were Leonard D. Ahl, Francis I. Sears, G. G. Amory, Frederick Ayer, Jr., C. G. Rice, G. S. Mandell, Childs Frick, Myopia Hunt Club, Durell Hall, Alvin F. Sortwell, A. C. Burrage and F. J. Alley.

New entrants for the open [illegible] class exhibition were J. [illegible] Appleton, Miss Phyllis Sears and Miss Olivia Ames. Mrs. Coolidge, the Misses Anna Agassiz, Mary Curtis and Eleonora Sears were likewise exhibitors, also F. T. Sears, G. von L. Meyer, Frederick Ayer, Jr., and C. G. Rice.

The only woman exhibitor in the class for teams of two hunters, which opened the afternoon program at 2 45 o'clock, was Miss Julia Appleton, who rode. Miss Appleton also exhibited "Mirone," in the Grafton Long Jump class, but was disqualified in the first round.

Although Mrs. Francis T. Sears, the Duluth, Minn., bride, now an adopted Bostonian, is credited with being a great equestrienne, she had the misfortune to be thrown from "Johnny Walker," her mount in the jumping exhibition. He made a very poor showing as a jumper. This handsome chestnut, in taking [illegible], crashed into the last barrier, toppled over on his side and lay for several minutes. Mrs. Sears, a diminutive, boyish figure, in her steel-gray habit and mannish derby perched on her blonde hair, showed her superior horsemanship, however, by slipping from his back and escaping injury.

The horse was helped up and fortunately was uninjured. He was petted and treated to sugar. It was both "Johnny Walker's" and Mrs. Sears' first public appearance as jumpers. Mrs. Sears certainly understood the trick of keeping clear of a horse when he has a bad fall over a horse show barrier.

Fredetick Ayer, Jr., and Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., in an exciting contest for honors in the Grafton Long Jump, provided further excitement, Ayer finally beating Tuckerman.

The Misses Emma Mandell and Anna Agassiz preserved the honors of those families on the hunting field, as did Julia Appleton of the Appleton coterie of the Myopia set.

Miss Anna Agassiz, in light gray riding breeches, coat and riding boots, hatless all day, sat on her restive horse and put him over the barriers with skill. I saw her late in the afternoon coming from the clubhouse, driving the big gray auto bus of her father's estate. She was en route over the rucky, sandy road to the polo grand stand.

Hints to Save Time of Housewife

SAVE all the little individual pieces of toilet soap, tie them in a piece of cheesecloth and drop into the tub when taking a bath. They make a fine lather, and in the long run will be found to save many a cake of soap. This is a particularly good idea for the children's tub.

The economical housewife will find it to her advantage to keep all the ends of partly used candles, which may be employed in various ways. For renovating hardwood floors the candle pieces should be very finely scraped and then sprinkled over the floor. The latter should then be polished by rubbing with a floor polisher either bought or home-made.

Handkerchiefs for Luck

An enterprising shop has recently advertised "Good Luck" handkerchiefs whose name alone should sell them and whose colors must prove irresistible to the girl who likes the square bit of cambric in some dainty hue.

These mouchoirs are to be had in pale blue, pink, rose, lavender, yellow and green, and the good luck motifs are represented in little white elephants, pink pigs, black cats and other familiar insignia, embroidered in one corner, and almost warranted to bring good luck to the owner. The good luck handkerchiefs are an importation from France.

Handy Recipe for Mint Sauce

WHEN mint sauce forms a part of the dinner it can be made by taking two tablespoonfuls of the mint to a small tablespoonful of white sugar and four tablespoonfuls of the best vinegar. Let this mixture stand for a couple of hours before using.

Fashion Favors Ribbon Uses

ALL the indications point to a good vogue for ribbons. Velvet ribbon is very largely used by the foreign dressmakers, particularly in black, but in exceptional instances in such tones as French blue, old rose, green and yellow.

Other than velvet ribbons are narrow rep weaves edged with gold or silver, and appropriate for the fashioning of rosettes to adorn the Napoleon hat of satin, beaver or velvet. The woman who likes white and black combinations will be pleased with the white ribbon showing decorative motifs in black, and then there are ribbons with a deep nap made to simulate the beaver, of which certain of the new Fall hats are fashioned.

The fashion of trimming dresses and hats with slashed ribbon has led some enterprising ribbon manufacturers to put on the market faille ribbon slashed at regular intervals and embroidered thereabout. Two-toned ribbon is among the new offerings, and it shows moire on one side and satin on the other.

Dowager Finds "Sculping" Serious Fad Among Society's Frivols

By THE DOWAGER.

"Sculping"—or, if you prefer, sculpturing—seems to be more popular among society women than any other form of artistic employment. And it is done seriously, too, and it is exhibited. For instance, there was a recent exhibition at Stockbridge in the fashionable Berkshires, at which Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, daughter of Mrs. Oscar Iasigi of Beacon street, won every sort of commendation from friendly, though critical, admirers.

A large reception was held on "Varnishing Day," at which Mrs. Daniel French Chester, wife of the noted sculptor, who is herself very much interested in the art, had the principal part of the tea in charge. Boston and Concord were represented in numbers which argue well for sculpturing. But these are not the only ones interested in the art as a practical art. Mrs. Washington B. Thomas, and her daughter, Miss Margaret Thomas, are two in a family who work miracles with the formless.

Rumor has it that Mrs. I. Tucker Burr of Marlboro street, is another devotee, as well as the beautiful Miss Mary Williams of Brookline. These ladies, together with a number of mutual friends, have established a class for the serious study of the art.

Mrs. Thomas has made wonderful progress. Born, as it seemed, with a genuine talent, she was able almost at once to do a thing or two which connoisseurs have tried in vain to buy. One of her loveliest creations, for which she has several times refused a most flattering offer, is an Italian set of pottery in three pieces. It consists of a huge pink bowl, the composition in twisted effect, and a pair of candlesticks, which rise two feet or more in height in the same composition. There was a request for the set to be sold at auction at the Italian Festa recently held on Mrs. Hammond's estate at Gloucester.

Dancing has been unusually in vogue this Berkshire season. The reaction which set in against dancing has turned a little back, and the art is more and more cultivated. Mrs. Carl de [illegible]dorff, a daughter-in-law of the late Dr. [illegible]toft, has been in charge of the big dancing class in Stockbridge. It has been alternating in meetings between her cottage and that of Mrs. Woodward Haven.

Saturdays have been the popular days for meeting. The list of patrons includes about as many grown-ups as debutantes. Practically all of the smart set are in it. Mrs. Austin Fox Riggs has had the [illegible] class in her own hands. [illegible] this means that everybody is dancing.

Robert Morse of Jamaica Plain is one of the late Summer motorists in the White Mountains. He spent the Summer with his family on his beautiful estate. Still, though it is rather late, he has encountered some extremely disagreeable weather. His daughter, Mrs. Lucius C. Whiting, and her daughter, Miss Sylvia Whiting, are members of the party. They were last heard from at the Mount Washington Hotel. Mr. Morse enjoyed a supper in the grill room, with his charming granddaughter sitting beside him. She wore a becoming gown of white muslin done with a quantity of Irish lace.

It is just as fashionable to follow the hounds in a motor and along the road as it is to follow across country on horseback. It is, moreover, less dangerous. Mrs. Henry Mortimer Brooks of New York, so well known here because of her many visits with her daughter, Mrs. Eugene V. R. Thayer, is enthusiastic about the drag hunts of the Suffolk hounds at Southampton. She and her husband follow by motor.

The dance which Harry W. Smith of Grafton gave last Saturday at the Grafton Country Club was a delightful surprise to the [illegible] of a birthday denouement for his wife. It is hard to recall a more happy gathering. Mr. Smith is known to all of us here as a brilliant rider at the Brookline Country Club, where his horses have invariably made a good showing. He was formerly M. F. H. of the Grafton Country Club.

Many invitations for the dance were received here, so that a number of Bostonians went up by auto. Late dancing and a delicious midnight supper were excellent excuses for not returning until the hours grew small and then began to grow large again.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, by the way, had a large house party over the week end at their delightful estate, "Lordvale," which, though large enough for ordinary hospitality, was not large enough for the lavish entertainment of Saturday night. Hence the Country Club.

I was surprised the other night—in fact, Saturday night—to see so many people from the South Shore at the dinner-dance at the Essex County Club on the North Shore. But a number had come up by motor to spend the double holiday as house guests of friends who have Summer residences near the club. Every table was occupied.

The gowns, I thought, were especially elaborate; but this was to be explained by the fact that many of the guests had just come from dinner, where hey had acted either in the capacity of guest or hostess.

Mrs. Arthur W. Mitten of Brookline was one of the prettiest women there. She had spent a portion of the week at Hamilton with her husband and young children, leaving their Scituate cottage for the time being.

Mrs. Mitten is an interesting type of blonde, rather brilliant; which makes her gown a subject of comment. It was white linen with white lace trimming on the bodice. Her hat was large and pictury with pale pink roses. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. William Carleton of Newton, also one of the party, was chic in a gown of white muslin and lace and a hat trimmed with garden flowers and their foliage.

Near this party, which numbered about eighteen covers, sat Miss Cadwalader of Philadelphia, who has been the recipient of a good deal of social attention.

It was only the other day that this attractive young woman was the guest of honor at one of the prettiest afternoon teas at the North Shore Grill at Magnolia. This followed a brilliant luncheon party, given in her honor the same day at "Green Gables," just a stone's throw from the [illegible].

Miss Cadwalader was gowned in pale lavender crepe de chine. Her soft bodice was trimmed in narrow bands of chiffon of a lighter shade and edged with narrow bands of black lynx fur, which is a fashionable combination this season for evening wear. In her hair—she was one of the few who did not wear a hat—there was a single aigrette of lavender tulle and a tall spiral of silver, on the end of which perched a very saucy butterfly of white and silver sequins. Miss Cadwalader has recently returned from Bar Harbor, where she has been, as she usually is, among the belles of the place.

No one has been more hospitable this Summer at Newport than Mrs. William E. Draper, formerly of this city, who is spending her first season at the fashionable resort. She had planned to be elsewhere, but the war conditions made that impossible; and she stayed on. Now, at the end of it all, she is leaving.

Her farewell dinner was given the other night; and Newport cannot remember anything to equal it. The guests came for the usual farewell entertainment, perhaps regretting that such a good hostess was about to leave them; but never imagining the wonder which was in store.

Mrs. Draper excused herself in a manner which drew attention. There was a good deal of speculation as to her absence, which seemed unnecessarily prolonged. At last she appeared. Close behind her came the butler, weighted down with that wonderful gold dinner service, which had not been used since her husband's death, and even then only at state dinners, when the late General William F. Draper was ambassador to Italy.

The service consists of four large gold mirrors, which are used on pale yellow damask, and the hostess in a dinner gown to match, usually pale yellow satin, with only her priceless pearls round her neck. No richer service, or richer ensemble, was ever seen in this country. If Mrs. Draper wears any other gown, it is black velvet; and if any other jewels, they are diamonds.

And just here it may not be mal apropos to mention a gift for the Festa which has not at yet received any mention at all. I mean the superb piece of Japanese tapestry which Mrs. Larz Anderson presented to Mrs. Hammond to be sold on shares ranging from one cent to $5, as indeed it was sold, with a profit of nearly a thousand dollars.

Mrs. William B. Bacon of this city, who has been summering at Nahant, has been entertaining lately a jolly house party at her beautiful Summer residence in Lenox. The guests were mostly young people, I hear. At the same time a house party was given at "Naumkeag" by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Choate in Stockbridge.

Neither party knew of the other, though very well acquainted in New York and Boston. It was something of a surprise, therefore, to all of them when they met at a large dance. The young and popular "Joe" Choate was greeted by a host of friends he believed to be far away. Mrs. Bacon is the mother of Mrs. "Joe" Lovering.

I really doubt if anyone has been more admired this Summer on the North Shore than Mrs. George H. Binney of Marlboro street. She is so young looking this year that it seemed for a while almost essential to post the fact at the club and the Oceanside that she is Mrs. B. senior. If not astonishing, it is at least incredible, that she is a grandmother for the second time.

It will be recalled that her only son, Dr. G. H. Binney, Jr., married the only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. "Billy" Appleton of Beacon street—that is, Miss Susan Appleton—and they have two children. Another of the young grandmothers is Mrs. Graeme Haughton. Her son, Harry Pratt McKean, Jr., married Miss Elizabeth Lee.

A bird resembling in some respects the stork has been seen hovering about the roof of Mrs. McKean's sister, Mrs. "Ollie" Turner (Miss Marie Lee). Mr. and Mrs. Turner have a house, I understand, very near that of Mrs. Turner's parents (Mr. and Mrs. George Lee of Brookline), which is situated delightfully at West Manchester near West Beach.

Miss Adele Thayer of Commonwealth avenue acted as hostess at a Labor Day house party at her attractive farm in Dublin, N. H., which she has called "Gnome Farm," with a little touch of imagination. She has passed nearly all the Summer there. Miss Thayer was unusually happy in her selection of a September holiday, for it was not only a week end—it was the Italian Festa besides. Miss Thayer was among the prime movers of this charity, in imitation of the Hammond affair, although Mrs. T. H. Cabot was really at the head of it. The entire family—that is, the Professor Pumpelly family of Newport, R. I., was there to assure succes.

A little story is connected with the naming of Miss Thayer's farm. It seems, when she dismantled her residence in Brookline, which was called "The Uplands," she had two enormous bronze gnomes which she didn't know what to do with. A friend suggested "Why, take them to your farm." "Yes," declared Miss Thayer, "and I'll call the farm after them."

The bronze gnomes may be seen up there at either side of the main staircase, in utter silence. They are of interest, but they are scarcely attractive. The attractive thing is her old-fashioned flower garden. It is surrounded by an old low iron fence. Every sort of bloom is there. Visitors, I understand, are a part of the daily routine.

VOLUNTEERS FOR ROSE DAY

Miss Ruth Anthony Aids Cause of Anti-Suffrage

A WELL KNOWN society [illegible] for the anti-[illegible] cause is Miss Ruth Anthony, daughter of Mrs. S. Reed Anthony of No. 125 Beacon street and Beverly Farms. Miss Anthony, who has been a notable figure in society since her debut, will help sell roses for Rose day, set for the date of the suffrage parade, October 16.

Miss Anthony has proven one of the prettiest bridesmaids at several society weddings; she is tall and slender, with blond hair and has many accomplishments, including versatility in a number of out-door sports. She is considered one of the best dancers of the Vincent Club. Mrs. Anthony, her mother, has also enlisted in the anti-suffrage cause, and belongs to committees whose principal duties for the time being will be preparing for and carrying on the rose-selling campaign.

Butler Crittendens to Live in New York

Mr. and Mrs. Butler Parnell Crittenden, who were quietly married August 28 at the bride's Summer home on Mystery Island, Beverly Farms, will live in New York city.

Mrs. Crittenden, who was formerly Miss Francelia Niles Sheldon, is the daughter of the James F. Sheldons of Belmont. She has been for many seasons identified with Summer life on this fashionable island off the Beverly Farms shore.

Dance and Bridge for Beverly Hospital

Smart North Shore society embraced in Beverly's Hospital Junior Aid Association is to give a dance and bridge tournament September 24 at the Essex Country Club. Miss Julia Meyer of Hamilton is chairman and is acting as ticket seller.

Coolidge-Cole Nuptials at Brookby

It [illegible] Cole's privilege [illegible] afternoon to be a bride in one of the most picturesque we[illegible] the North Shore for [illegible].

"Br[illegible] Far[illegible]" the Cole estate at [illegible] great expanse of [illegible] farming country, house of [illegible] yellow brick. It has a big modern garage [illegible] through the [illegible] huge weeping willows. It was the [illegible] who was formerly M[illegible], a member of [illegible]. Across the little [illegible] from the [illegible] main gardens is the [illegible] First Baptist Church [illegible]. The wedding part[illegible] house, down [illegible] across the little country road to the church. The Episcopal marriage service was used.

The other principal in this charming wedding was William Humphreys Coolidge, Jr., Harvard, '14, and son of the William H. Coolidges of Boston and "B[illegible] Farm," Magnolia.

The ceremony was set [illegible] reception for [illegible].

The altar, which is broad and low, lent itself [illegible] attractively to the masses of greenery and tall white Easter lilies adorning it. On the walls of the church, at intervals, were [illegible] effective groupings. There were masses of the same on the little choir loft.

The aisles were enclosed with broad white satin ribbons. On each pew was tied bunches of pink gladioli and evergreen.

A fine musical program was provided at the church. The artists were Professor [illegible], organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Miss El[illegible] W[illegible]more, violinist.

Some two hundred and more guests were seated in the church when Rev. John Lewis of St. John's Church, Waterbury, Ct., and Rev. Frank Parker, pastor of the village church, entered.

Over "Brookby" came the wedding party. A heavy white duck cloth had been laid on the field.

The first group in the procession to the church was Mrs. Cole, Mrs. Coolidge and Mr. Coolidge. When they were seated in the church the bridal party appeared. First came the groom and his best man, Benjamin E. Cole, 2d; next the maid of honor, Miss Corinna Searle of Boston and Ipswich; little Miss Katherine Coolidge, flower girl; the bride on the arm of her father, her court train supported by the two little train bearers, Masters Godfrey and Philip Simmons of Providence, [illegible] of the bride.

The ushers were James Hazen Ripley, Hempstead, L. I.; Richard M. Russell, John [illegible] Searle, the bridesmaid's brother; Samuel Sprague Stevens, brother-in-law of the bridegroom; Harrison Caner, Philadelphia and Dana's Beach, Manchester, and [illegible] King Landall, Irvington, N. Y.

The bride [illegible]. An ivory prayer book was carried [illegible] no trimming. She carried a shower bouquet.

The little flower girl was in a dainty lingerie frock of white. Her hat was of blue chiffon and little pink flowers. A basket of [illegible] member of the wedding party.

The bride's mother wore a handsome frock fashioned of navy blue chiffon built over navy blue satin. Gold lace accessories gleamed through the chiffon draperies on bodice and skirt. Her hat was of navy blue velvet of the large type. A small black feather ornament was its only adornment.

Mrs. Coolidge wore an elaborate gown of ecru lace built over cream taffeta. Her hat was fashioned of the same materials.

Among the guests at the church beside the large family parties of bride and groom were noted Mrs. G. S. Mandell, Mrs. John Phillips, Mrs. Charles Thorndike Parker, Miss Polly Proctor, the D. Herbert Hostetters, Mrs. Frank A. Magee, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lawrence White of Beverly Farms and Mr. and Mrs. J. Warren Merrill and Miss Merrill of Boston, Manchester and Wenham.

Over six hundred people responded to the wedding reception invitations. The day, though an uncomfortable one as to temperature, lent itself finely to the al fresco features of the reception. A dancing pavilion was erected, over which was a canvas canopy.

The Misses Katherine P. and Louisa P. Loring were present from Pride's, as was Helen Frick.

Taking Care of the French Army and Navy

The French Government, through the Minister of War and the Health Department, ordered 200,000 boxes of Cadum ointment for use by its Army and Navy during the present war. Great Governments do not experiment in matters of this kind. They employ remedies of a high standard only, and that is why Cadum was selected. Cadum ointment is wonderfully soothing and healing to the skin tissues. In troubles like eczema, scaly skin, eruptions, chafings, sores, pimples, etc., it gives gratifying relief. It stops irritation and itching and begins healing with the first application. Trial box 10c; large box 25c. All druggists.

Here Is the Contest Plan

Show Your Judgment. Start Now!

Each day, for 85 consecutive days, a picture will be printed in the Daily and Sunday American. Contestants must supply each picture with a title, using the title of a Play, that shall be the most fitting and appropriate, describing it most completely or fitting it most perfectly. The one supplying the greatest number of such "most fitting and appropriate" titles shall earn the first award; the one supplying the next greatest number shall earn the next award, etc.

There will be no book of titles to buy. An official List of Play Titles will appear each week in the Sunday American during the contest. This list will be the standard for contestants to use in selecting the titles for the pictures appearing during the seven days beginning with each Sunday Official List Publication, and all titles selected for that week's seven pictures must be among those in and selected from this list.

LYNN SCHOOL WAR THREATENS COMMISSION

Election of Two Married Teachers Arouses Opponents of Present Form of Government.

Two married women teachers in the Lynn public schools, one a bride of less than [illegible] weeks, [illegible] cause the abolition of the [illegible] form of Lynn city government, which is the [illegible] [illegible] to married teachers, especially [illegible] unmarried candidates.

A petition for abolition of the commission form of government, which has been simmering for three weeks, boiled over when news came out of the election of two married teachers at last Wednesday night's meeting of the School Committee.

Signatures to the petition flowed in so rapidly that 1,5[illegible] names—the required number—were reached yesterday noon.

Before the time limit for the petition [illegible] is reached [illegible] backers [illegible] expect 2,[illegible] names.

If the signatures pass inspection the petition must be put on the ballot for submission to the voters at the coming [illegible] election in December.

The question for the voters will be whether or not they will adopt "Plan B" of city government. This plan calls for a mayor, four aldermen-at-large and seven ward aldermen, one from each ward. The present city government by commission consists of a mayor and five commissioners.

The abolition of the commission form of government figures in the question of married teachers, because, say the opponents of married teachers, the present school committee has a majority of three which elected the married teachers. Under the old or ward aldermen form of government there would be real ward representation and a more weighty influence on the school committee.

TWO TEACHERS IN CASE.

The two married teachers whose election has so stirred the community are Mrs. Pearl [illegible] Hawley of Boston and Mrs. William Zwicker of Everett. The latter is [illegible]. She was married last Tuesday.

Mrs. Hawley is a former social worker in Lynn when Frank J. Peaslee was superintendent of schools. The board elected her to the teaching staff. Her husband, Ralph Ernest Hawley, was elected superintendent of [illegible] year.

There is a rule of the Lynn School Board that married women shall not be [illegible] that the marriage of a woman teacher suspends her automatically, except for good reason. By the latter is meant a case where a married woman teacher is supported by her own earnings and not by her husband.

Comment was made on the election of Mrs. Hawley. Feeling against the action of the school board, fanned by old grievances, increased. Then came the start of the petition three weeks ago for abolition of the commission form of government.

Last Wednesday night the appointment of Mrs. Hawley as principal of the new Washington primary school at $1,[illegible] a year was announced. Miss Anne G. Whittier, principal of a grammar school and a teacher for thirty-two years, receives only $1,400 a year. Friends of Miss Whittier were incensed.

MAYOR APPROVED.

But the same night Mrs. Zwicker, formerly Miss Young, was approved for continuance in her former position by a vote of 3 to 2. Mrs. Myra Allen Ruppel, Nathaniel Breed and Rev. C. Thurston Chase, who had voted to elect Mrs. Hawley, made the same majority for Mrs. Zwicker.

Mayor George H. Newhall, chairman ex-officio of the school board, protested. He said that a married woman should be supported by her husband. F. Walter McDonough, of the board, agreed.

The next day the agitation against the school board was renewed. The petitioners for abolition of the commission form of government saw their chance. Finance Commissioner Roy F. Bergengren of the present city Council is [illegible] in favor of abolishing the present [illegible] form of city government, naturally. It would abolish the school board and substitute a commissioner of education. That would make six commissioners grow where five now grow, in the City Council.

VARY IN OPINION.

Commissioner Bergengren says:

"The way to meet the attitude of the School Board is to abolish the board and appoint a Commissioner of Education. For more than two months I have received complaints from parents of girls educated in the Lynn schools and graduated from the State Normal School who have not been able to secure positions as teachers in Lynn. In nearly every instance, I understand, these girls have been told that, after getting experience outside of Lynn, they would be eligible for the Lynn schools."

Mrs. Myra Allen Ruppel, one of the majority which voted for Mrs. Hawley and Mrs. Zwicker, said yesterday:

"The members of the school board acted for the best interests of the citizens of Lynn and the children [illegible] teacher elected is thoroughly investigated before names are reported at the meeting."

STAND OF THE MINORITY.

The minority members disagree, however. Mayor Newhall says:

"I think when a woman is married and has a husband capable of supporting her she should give way to unmarried women, unless of course there is illness in her family which compels her to seek employment.

"Preference should be given to Lynn girls as teachers in the Lynn schools, but I would not hesitate to vote for an efficient teacher from some other town, if single and recommended by the superintendent of schools."

Committeeman McDonough says:

"In voting against the married women as teachers in Lynn schools, I feel that I am obliged to, owing to the rules of the board which read that married women shall not be appointed as teachers, unless there is some reason. This last clause, I believe, relates to women who are obliged to support themselves, and not to women whose husbands are able to support them.

"When Mrs. Hawley was elected she received the position over a long list of applicants who should have been given preference."

Seymour J. Watson of the foreign education department of the General Electric Company's Lynn plant finds two sides to the question, saying:

"I am somewhat favorably impressed towards the election of married women as teachers in primary departments, that is, if they are mothers themselves, but even then I would require that these women have no husband capable of supporting them."

THE PEST WAR

One of the greatest [illegible] in history is the warfare of man against household pests. This war for supremacy has been waged for centuries. It is a war of extermination. There can be no compromise. Either [illegible] exterminate the pests or the pests [illegible] man. As the battle stands [illegible] man has won some notable victories. [illegible] discovered how the mosquito [illegible] the yellow fever germ and [illegible] himself against this attack. [illegible] plague [illegible] defense measures arranged [illegible]. The secret attack of the bed bug with its assortment of deadly disease germs has been [illegible] and conquered. While the [illegible] attacks of the [illegible] cockroach have been [illegible] defeated. As in every [illegible] this pest war [illegible]. For it is [illegible] prepared with [illegible] weapons [illegible].

Martin's Pest Exterminators are the 42-centimeter guns of this battle of the centuries. Compared to this heavy artillery the weapons of earlier days are as pea shooters.

A survey of the pest battlefield for the last quarter of a century will show the havoc they have wrought. Everywhere the exterminators have hammered a road through the ranks of the pest army and they are still battering and shattering their strongest citadels.

Martin's Pest Exterminators are the best guns for the battle against household pests. Sold by all drug and department stores everywhere for 50c and $1.00, 60c and $1.10 by mail. Eleven different kinds. Name pest to be used for when ordering.

Magdalene of the Passion Play to Devote Life to Religious Drama

Fraulein Mayer, Now of Boston, Decides This Is Her Mission

Her Latest Letter from Oberammergau Tells of Her Brother's Departure for the War.

By VIRGINIA DARE

"I have made up my mind to enter the broad field of religious drama," Fraulein Marie Mayer [illegible]

Miss Mayer, whose presentation of Mary Magdalene in the Passion Play of 1900 at Oberammergau [illegible] her name to be heard 'round the world is [illegible] hundreds of New Englanders and has been [illegible] since she landed in this country, now just a year [illegible].

We sat chatting in the spacious living-room [illegible] the pretty little Swiss cottage at the very top of the [illegible] hill at Arlington which she has adopted as her home.

"You see," she continued, "since I came to this wonderful country I have only had time to have seen [illegible]. Your people have been so good to me that my [illegible] carrying me always to some other place, to other delightful friends. Very soon now I am leaving for the West, the far West of California, and I shall go to many places and see many old friends who have been to Oberammergau. Then I am coming back to Boston, where I shall throw all my life into preparing for my mission, yes, that's what I call it—MY MISSION."

DEVOTED TO MISSION.

No one [illegible] Miss Mayer could doubt that she had a mission. Her eyes—unforgettable eyes—that make one think of softly opening flowers, were full of a convincing sincerity, and something that made you know she [illegible] and this, coupled with an attractive manner make an invincible combination. She will still give her talks on the Passion Play, and she will study, with always the one purpose in view, that of becoming an exponent of the great drama of religion.

"Don't you think," she said, "that maybe giving oneself to the interpretation of religious drama is another way of being a priest or a clergyman?

"And that is what I want to do. I want to create something in the minds of others that will give them hope and courage.

"One small incident," she continued reminiscently, "I always love to recall. It happened one day when I was in Randolph giving a talk before one of the women's clubs. As usual it was of the Passion Play, and at the end many people came up to speak to me, among them was an old, old lady, very much bent and lined, but inside just full of fire. As she took my hand she said simply, 'My dear, I shall never forget you nor what you have said—to me'—— And I shall never forget her nor what her words meant to me.

"That is what I want to do in the drama, I want to speak right into the hearts of the people. And because I have succeeded in Mary Magdalene, I have hopes and inspiration that in this way I may bring a message."

You see I am optimistic," she smiled.

RECOLLECTIONS OF SING SING

I wanted to know what had given her the most real joy since she had been with us, and without a moment's hesitation she said:

"The day I talked to the prisoners at Sing Sing—that will always be to me a day apart. I just talked to them about the Passion Play at Oberammergau. About a thousand men listened to me, and during the whole hour and a half of my talk I felt that not a single mind wandered from the drama of which I was telling them.

"After I got back to Boston one of the prisoners sent me the prison paper, the 'Star of Hope' which had mentioned my talk, and with it came a [illegible] from him saying, 'We [illegible] be there in [illegible].'

While at Sing Sing I was the [illegible] Mrs. James J. [illegible] and M[illegible] Burgess accompanied me.

"When I do get time to think over [illegible]

"After Sing Sing we went to Blackwell's Island," continued Miss Mayer, and somehow the amusement and laughter left her eyes as she said. "Ah, it made me very sad, those girls. I cannot forget them yet.

"If life did not demand that I make money I should like always to work for those who cannot pa[illegible] there is [illegible] more satisfaction [illegible]

I try to create somet[illegible] minds and hearts of my h[illegible] when I do not do that I [illegible] nothing, I get nothing.

MARY, A DREAM COME TRUE.

"But tell me, Miss Mayer, how you happened to take the part of Mary Magdalene" she was asked.

"That" she exclaimed, "Was the greatest joy of my whole life, the very very best.

Always, since I was a tiny little girl, to be Mary Magdalene was my dream, so you may imagine five years ago when the Burgomaster and the Directors selected me for this wonderful part, what it meant—the dream come true!" As [illegible] she looked the very [illegible] with the prophecy of [illegible] dreams that would yet come true for her.

When asked if the war would affect the Passion Play she said [illegible] there have been many wars since [illegible] they continue. I do not think this [illegible] listen to [illegible] soon the mess[illegible] thought, one for all and all for one. Everybody remaining here is busy and interested in the new home that is being built for the orphans and widows and many Americans living in Munich are patronesses. I met Anton Lang (Christus of 1900 and 1910) as I was coming from church, he said, 'working for this monument [illegible] cause.' Your brother Paul, has finished his training and after a few days furlough with me went to his regiment."

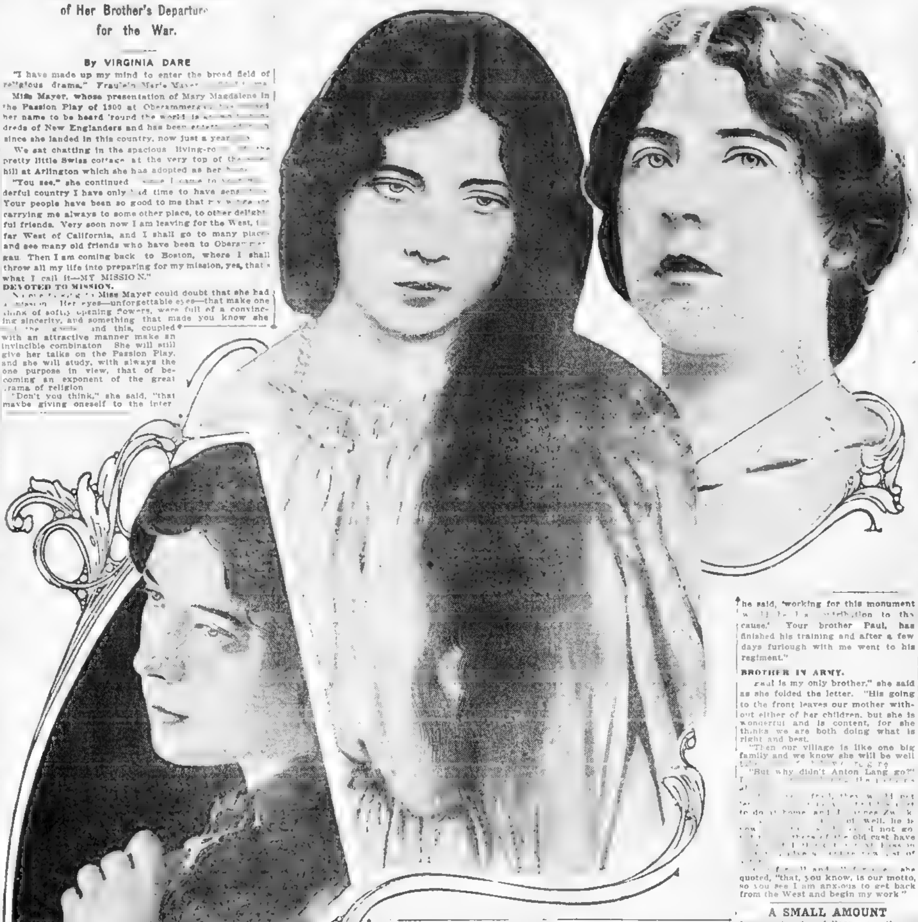
BROTHER IN ARMY.

"Paul is my only brother," she said as she folded the letter. "His going to the front leaves our mother without either of her children, but she is wonderful and is content, for she thinks we are both doing what is right and best.

"Then our village is like one big family and we know she will be well [illegible]

"But why didn't Anton Lang go?" [illegible] to do at home and [illegible] Zwink [illegible] well, he is [illegible] not go [illegible] of the old cast have [illegible]

"[illegible] for all and all for one," she quoted, "that, you know, is our motto, so you see I am anxious to get back from the West and begin my work."



Two strikingly dramatic portraits of Fraulien Marie Mayer as she appeared in the role of Mary Magdalene in the Passion Play at Oberammagau in 1900 and (at right) a snapshot of Fraulien Mayer taken at her home in Arlington.

ECZEMA ALL OVER CHILD'S HEAD

Caused Hair To Fall Out. Little Boy Caught Trouble. Itched and Burned.

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"My little girl's eczema formed little sore eruptions on her head. It spread all over her head, and her scalp was red and sore. It caused her hair to fall out and stopped the growth of the hair in every way. Somehow my little boy caught it and had his head affected just like the girl's. Both of their heads broke out in pimples and itched and burned causing them to irritate the affected parts. My little boy was cross and fretful, and my little girl would pick the eruption while asleep.

"Both children had it for seven months, and one day my oldest daughter said 'Why don't you use Cuticura Soap and Ointment?' So I tried them, and they healed their heads completely." (Signed) Mrs. Brennan, 21 Emmon St., East Boston, Mass., Feb. 8, 1915.

L. C. B. A. BRANCH HAS TWO BRIDES

Miss Rita Fallon and Miss Elizabeth Daley of Dorchester Are Married.

Two well-known members of the Rev. David Power branch of the Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association of Dorchester became brides of early September. Miss Rita Fallon was married to Edward Barker in St. Mathew's Church Thursday afternoon. Miss Fallon is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fallon of No. 8 Capen street, Dorchester. She is the pianist for Rev. David Power branch, as well as director of the David Power orchestra. Her mother and sister are charter members of the branch, as is her mother-in-law, Mrs. Barker.

The bride wore a gown of white crepe de [illegible] and princess lace, with a tulle veil and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Miss Marion Fallon, the bride's sister, wore an attractive creation of pink crepe de chine with folds of soft lace, with which she wore a large picture hat and carried Killarney roses. Frank Moran was best man.

A reception to the immediate family followed at the home of the bride's parents, after which the couple left on a honeymoon to Virginia. Upon their return they will live on Feldon street, Dorchester.

The other bride of the branch was Miss Elizabeth Daley, who married William Goodwin at a nuptial mass in St. Peters' Church, Dorchester, Wednesday morning. The bride was becomingly gowned in white bridal satin trimmed with chantilly lace. [illegible] wore a [illegible] veil [illegible] with [illegible] a shower [illegible] of the valley.

Miss [illegible] Dolan, maid of honor, [illegible] attractive in gown of [illegible] chine, trimmed with [illegible] wore a picture hat and [illegible]. Frederick Goodwin was best man, while the ushers were [illegible] Doolin, Louis Goodwin [illegible] Goodwin. The bride was [illegible] Doolin.

[illegible] the ceremony a reception [illegible] the future home of the bride at No. 33 Dunlap street, Dorchester. After a honeymoon to New York and New Jersey the bride will [illegible] to her friends after October 1 at Dunlap street. The groom's [illegible] sister are charter members of the Rev. David Power branch. the members of the branch showered many congratulations on the popular [illegible].

One of the largest opening affairs of the Mission Church branch will be the mammoth whist party which the members are planning for in Tremont Hall on Tuesday evening, September 21. Mrs. Margaret O'Riordan, president of the branch, will be in charge of the affair, assisted by a large committee of the members.

The opening of the Fall social season of St. Joseph's branch, Somerville, will be a guest night in McKinley Hall, Union square, Thursday evening. Mrs. Alice Maloney, supreme deputy of the branches, will be guest of honor. Mrs. Margaret Fonntaney, president of the branch, with the assistance of a large committee, is arranging a novel and entertaining program.

A social under the direction of St. Margaret's branch of Dorchester will be held [illegible] hall [illegible] president of the [illegible] in charge.

[illegible] branch of East Boston [illegible] trolley trip to Salem [illegible]. The members are to meet at 10.30 this morning. Dinner will be served at the Willows.

NON-PARTISANS TO MEET WEDNESDAY

Women in New Organization Plan to Keep Politics Out of the Federation.

The Association of Non-Partisan Clubwomen has set the date for its first formal meeting. Mrs. Henry Coolidge Mulligan, the president, will call the association to order Wednesday at 2.30 p. m., at the Twentieth Century Club, No. 3 Joy street.

This organization springs from the discord that occurred at Marion, when the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs passed a resolution putting the federation on record as a suffrage organization with a vote of 203 to 99. The promoters of the Non-Partisan Association claim that this will tend to disrupt the clubs and are therefore calling together non-sectarian and non-partisan clubwomen to keep politics out of the federation.

At the meeting on Wednesday, the consideration of the policy of the association will be decided upon and the election of directors will take place.

All interested clubwomen are invited and will be admitted on presentation of visiting cards with the name of the holder's club.

Death of Vermont Governor's Mother

FRANKLIN, Vt., Sept. 11.—Mrs. L. Rebecca Gates, mother of Governor Charles W. Gates, died today after a long illness. She was eighty-four years of age. Governor Gates left here August 31 for California to attend the convention of the American Road Building and American Highway Associations, which opens at Oakland tomorrow. Governor Gates was to preside and deliver the opening address [illegible] to the [illegible] bank.

CUT THIS OUT

OLD ENGLISH RECIPE FOR CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES.

If you know of some one who is troubled with Catarrhal Deafness, head noises or ordinary catarrh cut out this formula and hand it to them and you will have been the means of saving some poor sufferer perhaps from total deafness. In England scientists for a long time past have recognized that catarrh [illegible] and necessarily requires a constitutional treatment.

Sprays, inhalers and nose douches are liable to irritate the delicate air passages and force the disease into the middle ear, which frequently means total deafness, or else the disease is driven down the air passages towards the lungs, which is equally as dangerous. The following formula which is used extensively in the damp English climate is a constitutional treatment and should prove especially efficacious to sufferers here who live under more favorable climate conditions.

Secure from your druggist 1 ounce of Parmint (double strength). Take this home and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and 4 ounces of granulated sugar, stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day. This will often bring quick relief from distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and hearing improve as the inflammation in the eustachian tubes is reduced. Parmint is used in this way as it acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system and has a slight tonic action that facilitates the recovery of the patient. The preparation is easy to make, costs little and is pleasant to take. Every person who has catarrh should give this treatment a trial.

This Man Tells FREE How He Was Cured of Catarrh

It is a new way. It is something absolutely different. No lotions, sprays or sickly smelling salves or creams. No [illegible] Nothing to smoke or inhale. No steaming [illegible] thing delightful and healthful, something instantly successful. You do not have to wait, and linger and pay out a lot of money. You can stop it over night—and I will gladly tell you how—FREE. I am not a doctor and this is not a so-called doctor's prescription—but I am cured and my friends are cured, and you can be cured. Your suffering will stop at once like magic.

I Am Free You Can Be Free

My catarrh was filthy and loathsome. It [illegible] undermined my health and was weakening my will. The hawking, coughing, spitting made me obnoxious to all, and my foul breath and disgusting habits made even my loved ones avoid me secretly. My de[illegible] life was dulled and my faculties impaired. I knew that in time it would bring me to an untimely grave, because every moment of the day and night it was slowly yet surely sapping my vitality.

But I found a cure, and I am ready to tell about it FREE. Write me promptly.

The Secret of Growing Queenly Hair

Beauty Secrets of Immense Value Revealed by the Beauty-Queen of the American Stage, Valeska Suratt.

BY VALESKA SURATT

WHEN the proper means are employed, a difference of several inches a month in the growth of your hair can easily be produced. Mere hair tonics such as are commonly sold in a form ready to use are weak in force and nearly always disappointing in results. By securing the following from your druggist and making them yourself at home, you obtain the most effective hair grower [illegible] will prove it. Make a mixture of one ounce of beta-quinol, one-half pint of alcohol and [illegible] water (or use a [illegible] if you wish instead of the [illegible] water). Apply this liberally and often. This constitutes a hair forcer, that is, it compels hair to grow, and with remarkable rapidity. The hair will stop falling, the hair roots will quickly take on new vigor, and when this occurs a magnificent growth of luxuriant hair is the sure result. This formula makes more than one pint of hair-grower, far more effective than the best so-called prepared hair [illegible] that can be bought. Any drug store can supply you with the beta-quinol. Start with this hair-forcer today and see the difference in a month.

EMMA C. T.—My formula will surely remove superfluous hairs easily, quickly and thoroughly. Apply simple sulfo solution to the hairs, and they dissolve away almost instantly, instead of being burned off as with other hair removers. It never leaves a mark or red spot, never irritates or harms the most delicate skin and never fails. It is really a marvel, and far superior to any of the advertised articles. The drug store will supply you with the simple sulfo solution.

MRS. B. G. R.—To give the skin a surpassingly lovely complexion, my following cream is to be liberally used. The results in a short time will exceed your fondest expectations. Try it and you'll see! Make up a mixture of two tablespoonfuls of glycerine and one ounce of zintone in a pint of water. This makes over a pint of the cream, which is several times more than you get in the stores of the prepared creams which can never produce the desired results. Every red spot, freckle and blemish, and all muddiness will disappear and leave the skin clear and pure.

MISS N. O. G.—My following formula has become famous for its wonderful results in making the skin plump and vigorous and removing quickly all traces and lines of age: Mix two tablespoonfuls of glycerine and two ounces of eptol in half a pint of water. This forms a beautiful, satiny cream with wonderful tissue-building properties. Big and little wrinkles, crow's feet and looseness of flesh simply disappear, making a difference in appearance of age which is truly wonderful. Use this formula liberally and you will not fail to achieve the desired results. It is very economical and more effective than any cream known.

MRS. T. G. S.—Am sorry you couldn't get the beta-quinol at the drug store. In such a case, my secretary will get it and send it to you if you will address "Secretary to Valeska Suratt, Thompson Bldg., Chicago," and enclose the price, which is fifty cents.

MARTHA D.—It is often a difficult matter to develop the bust and no one can tell with certainty that it can be accomplished in any particular case. But my formula, made with two ounces of rustone and half a cup of sugar in a pint of cold water and taken in two teaspoonfuls after each meal and before retiring is the best and surest means known for the purpose. Mechanical appliances, pills, etc., should not be used.

MRS. B. O. R.—Blood tonics will never remove blackheads. Pinching them out makes the condition worse and spots the skin. It is not generally known that blackheads may be removed in a very few minutes by sprinkling some powdered neroxin on a sponge made wet with hot water, and rubbing this on the affected places. The result is astonishing even in very advanced cases. Any drug store has neroxin. My method is the only practical one, and you can actually see the result taking place.

MISS MARJORIE T.—An amazingly effective dandruff remover is secured by dissolving a teaspoonful of eggol in a half cup of hot water. Enough eggol can be secured at any drug store for a small price to give over a dozen of these head washes.

MISS P. O. R.—Yes, the face powder I use is made after my own formula. It is called "Valeska Suratt Face Powder." It is free from the chalkiness of nearly all face powders, and superb in fineness, smoothness and [illegible]. It is sold in many drug and department stores. Should you find difficulty in getting it, write to my secretary as suggested to Mrs. T. G. S., enclose fifty cents and ask for white or flesh.—Advertisement

REGULAR ARTILLERYMEN TURN INFANTRYMEN WITH SURPRISING RESULTS

BOSTON HARBOR DEFENDERS RECEIVE STRENUOUS LESSONS IN TRENCH WARFARE

SECOND CORPS CAMP TOUR OF MUCH INTEREST

Cadets First to Adopt the War Department Plan of Change to Artillery Arms.

Today the Second Corps of Cadets, one of the oldest military organizations in the country, will go into camp at Boxford for a seven-day tour of duty.

This tour will be watched by every man connected with the militia in the State, and especial attention will be paid it by the War Department.

The Corps that has a charter dating back of 1793 as an infantry organization of four companies will begin today its first tour as a battalion of field artillery of three companies.

Every officer and man in it will have to begin to study and learn the routine from the ground up.

A new major is in command, Major Thorndike C. How[illegible], late commander of battery C of Lawrence.

Lieut. Col. Charles C. Ropes, former commander of the Cadets, has been retired and the lieutenant colonelcy abolished. One company has been disbanded, and its members taken into the other three.

There is still room for 100 or more patriotic young men to enlist in this new outfit, without any cost whatsoever except that of time.

Major General Leonard Wood commanding the Department of the East, and instrumental in establishing the Plattsburg camp, will visit Boxford on Wednesday with Governor Walsh and several high army officials.

It was through the earnest appeal of the War Department to Adjutant General Charles H. Cole for the establishing of a battalion of field artillery that the suggestion was made to the second Corps of Cadets which immediately accepted the proposition.

The European war and the recent trouble along the Mexican border convinced the War Department that field artillery is what is needed in the militia of the country and an appeal was sent out to the forty-nine adjutant generals. Massachusetts was the first to respond.

The War Department has sent on four competent field artillery officers who will drill the men of the Cadets and the guns and outfit of Battery C will be used for this encampment.

MALDEN GIRL IS FELLED BY THUG

Mystery Surrounds Brutal Attack on Young Woman; Unable to Describe Assailant.

Mystery surrounds a brutal attack on Miss Emily Coffin, a twenty-two-year-old Malden girl of No. 29 Vernon street, while she was returning to her home at an early hour in the morning. She is suffering from shock and from a two-inch gash in her head.

Miss Coffin is a telephone operator in a Boston exchange, and boarded a Malden-Melrose car at Scollay square at 1 o'clock, arriving in Malden at 1:30 a. m. She left the car at Main and Vernon streets and started walking rapidly down Vernon street to her home, only three doors from the corner. As the car started, a young fellow who had boarded the car at the North Station jumped from the car and also walked down Vernon street.

While the young woman carried a handbag and a pocketbook, no attempt was made to take it away from her. She was felled by the blow and the fellow then ran off. She reached home in a dazed condition.

Conductor G. H. Patenaude of the Bay State car line said he was about 25 years old, wore a cap and soft shirt, was 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighed about 1[illegible] pounds. As he approached Miss Coffin from behind she was unable to give a description of him.

R.H. WHITE Co

The Crowning Achievement in the 62 Years of This Business

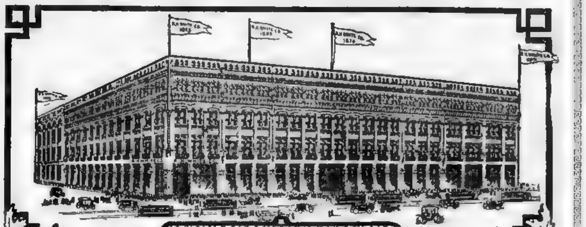
Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars' Worth of New Merchandise

At prices possible only through the generous good will and co-operation of our manufacturers, wholesalers and importers, with some of whom we have done business for over half a century.

1000 Record-Making Bargains

To which we invite old friends and new throughout all New England to share and Save Money.

924 TRAINED EXTRA EMPLOYES



This chest, in which Mr. White, when starting his career, carried his merchandise from town to town in the Berkshires, was the "acorn" from which grew the great "oak"—the great business building illustrated above.

RULES

1—This is the one sale of the year that overwhelms not only our own delivery service, but all the express companies as well. Deliveries may be a day or so delayed. Help us by taking small packages with you.

2—If you live outside the district reached by our own delivery wagons, you can save from 12 to 24 hours if you use a Quick Shopping Ticket. Ask for one from the first salesperson from whom you make a purchase. Quick Shopping Desk and Postoffice rear of Street Floor.

3—Because of the great congestion we cannot receive any C. O. D. orders amounting to less than $2.00.

Mail Orders will be filled as long as lots last

A Word From Mr. White

I want to take this opportunity to say a few words about this sale to which we attach so much importance. It is a great satisfaction for us to see this annual sale grow bigger each year because we work hard to make it bigger and to deserve this increase by putting forth every effort to give our many thousands of friends the best bargains which our big organization and our widespread buying connections make possible.

Our business throughout the year is so large and profitable to mills, manufacturers and importers, that for this Anniversary Sale they try to show their appreciation by giving us the best they have with no profit to themselves, and in many cases at an actual loss. Only in this way could we hold a sale of such vast proportions as this at the very opening of the season, in which every lot is a great bargain and at a price much below its real worth.

This 62d Anniversary Sale of ours represents the pride we hold in a business that has thrived under one management for over half a century. It affords us a chance to reverse the usual order of things, and to give instead of receive on our Business Birthday. Therefore, I most cordially invite the thousands of friends this business has made in the past and the many thousands of new friends to be with us in this Anniversary Sale—not only for our gratification but for their own benefit

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING MOVE IN BILLERICA

Homestead Commission Aids in Attempt at Co-operative Housing.

That Massachusetts has in operation the first attempt at improved co-operative methods of housing for working men, such as have proved successful in England, is brought out by the [illegible] report of the Massachusetts Homestead Commission, now being printed.

The enterprise is at Billerica. A fifty-four-acre tract of land is being developed under the co-operative plan. An excerpt from the report of the commission describing the organization [illegible]

[illegible] Chapter [illegible] Homestead Commission was authorized 'to promote the formation of organizations intended to increase the supply of wholesome homes for the people.' Acting under this provision, the commission [illegible] the co-operative [illegible] which private capital is [illegible] the construction of [illegible] in this and in foreign countries. It desired to formulate safe and simple plans for co-operation [illegible] acquiring homes.

The commission has investigated every opportunity which has come to its knowledge for establishing such [illegible] of four more or less [illegible] prospects, conditions at Billerica were found to be unusually favorable for a successful undertaking.

[illegible] use the enterprise was co-operative [illegible] avoided private profits by limiting its dividends, [illegible] to increase the supply of [illegible] at a place where they [illegible] particularly needed, the [illegible] and advice in the organization of Billerica Garden Suburb, Inc., which was incorporated June 2[illegible] 1914 with Thomas Jenkins, superintendent of the Boston & Maine repair shops at Billerica, as president; W. P. Sheppard, Esq., as clerk, Rev. Charles H. Williams of Billerica, treasurer and general manager. The company took over a fifty-four-acre estate at North Billerica.

"This marked the first conclusive stage in bringing into existence in this country improved co-operative methods of housing for workingmen that have proved successful in England, for nowhere else in the United States, so far as is known, have the five essential elements—site planning, limited number of houses per acre, wholesale operations, limited dividend and participation by the residents [illegible] been combined in an undertaking designed to meet the needs of the workman earning $12 to $20 per week.

"Dividends are limited to 5 per cent., cumulative. Each resident must be a shareholder. A portion of the tract will be turned over to a co-partnership society for development by that method; in another section houses will be sold outright on installments, in a third section houses for rent will be built, and in the fourth section the company will construct special buildings as the demand arises for shops, lodgings, boarding houses, etc. Provision is made for community buildings, playgrounds and allotment gardens. Capital to the extent of $[illegible] was sought to initiate the undertaking. In August a prospectus was issued and at that time nearly $16,540 had been subscribed. By October 1 the roads on thirty acres had been graded and the first three houses were begun. In December, nineteen families were living on the estate."

A. L. Chappell Buys 40-Acre Holden Farm

Arthur E. Cole has sold to Arthur L. Chappell the forty-acre farm on Reservoir street, Holden, including a twelve-room house, barn, carriage house, and a poultry house. 3—It is much better to buy land in the [illegible] land can be bought in this locality at prices ranging from $[illegible] to $100 an acre.

4—One hundred dollars is a high price to pay for the lots in question.

U. 13—The land is worth in the neighborhood of ten cents a foot. It is a good section in which to buy for improvement. A large number of houses have been built in the immediate vicinity during the course of the last few years and builders are still very active. This is one of the fastest growing sections in Boston.

C. 1—There are two ways by which you may convey the property. You can give the title to the purchaser subject to the two mortgages [illegible] the two mortgages pres[illegible] time of sale, and thus disc[illegible] mortgage at the time of [illegible] papers.

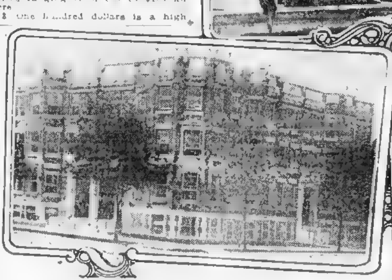
W. F. C. 8100—There has been no [illegible] the time of purchase. Streets have been indicated, but never cut through. Sewers have never been laid. Nor has town water been installed. Moreover, the land is swampy. Each year from twenty-five to fifty lots are taken over by the town authorities for non-payment of taxes.

E. C. 8—The company in question has been established some thirteen or fourteen years. We know nothing against them. It is hardly likely that they will refuse to give you a deed when your payments are com[illegible] $300 on the lot, it would be advisable to continue payments.

E. T. 20—Yes, you can deed the property to the trustee. Have a deed of trust made out, containing such provisions as you wish to enforce. Have it specify for example that the income from the property is to revert to you and that upon your decease the property is to come into the possession of the trustee, or whoever you wish to be your beneficiary.

Guide and Addendum Quicken Rentals; Agents Report Big Demand for Suites

THREE APARTMENT HOUSES ILLUSTRATED IN ADDENDUM.



Send in Your Application at Once for Copy of American's Renting Register.

Renting agents report an unusually heavy demand for apartments in Allston, Brookline and the Back Bay.

This early concentration of renting is due to two factors, according to well-posted renting agents—first, the realization on the part of the public that fewer suites than in past years are available and, second, the stimulating effect on rentals of the AMERICAN'S Renting Register and Illustrated Addendum.

And with a rapidly decreasing number of apartments from which to select, it is advisable for persons who have not yet selected their apartments to get busy. Moreover, to facilitate their search prospective apartment-house dwellers should at [illegible] AMERICAN'S Renting Register and Illustrated Addendum.

The pick of available apartments, both new and old, are listed in the Renting Register and illustrated in the Addendum. Available suites run the entire gamut from the small, inexpensive suite to the large, costly apartment of ten rooms or more.

Copies of the Renting Register and Illustrated Addendum may be had without cost upon application at either office of the AMERICAN, No. 80 Summer street or [illegible] Washington street. The Register and Addendum are also being distributed at a number of drug stores and newsstands in Greater Boston and many of the leading Summer hotels throughout New England.

The photographs at the top of the page, which are reproduced from the Illustrated Addendum, indicate the type of structures which are listed in the booklet.

The picture at the top shows the apartment house located at Nos. 1293 to 1309 Commonwealth avenue, Allston, facing Corey Hill. There are a hundred suites of from three to seven rooms in the building. The appointments of these suites are of the most modern type, and include hardwood floors, tile bathrooms, fireplaces and large gas ranges. [illegible]

[illegible] Westchester, which is located at No. [illegible] Beacon street [illegible] of one to three rooms and kitchenettes. Tenants are supplied with all modern conveniences including steam heat, continuous hot water, A. B. See elevators and janitor service. E. White of No. 841 Beacon street is the renting agent.

At the left is the apartment [illegible] at Nos. 142 to 146 Coolidge street and No. 78 Gibbs street. There are available suites of three to six rooms with [illegible] building is equipped with all modern conveniences, such as tile bathrooms, hardwood floors, continuous hot water and janitor service. Morris Kadnack of No. 40 Court street is the owner.

Expect Keen Bidding at Realty Sales

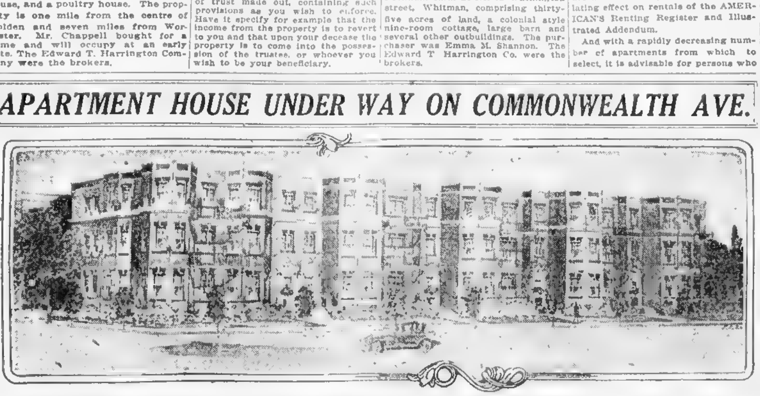
Keen bidding is expected to develop on Thursday when Municipal Auctioneer "Eddie" Foye offers [illegible] at 11 o'clock.

On Thursday, September 23, at 11 o'clock, Auctioneer Foye will offer for sale a tract of land in Allston, fronting on Cambridge, Mansfield and Lincoln streets. The sale was originally scheduled for September 9, but was postponed. There are 13,945 square feet in the parcel. The property is available for stores and apartments and is within fifteen minutes of Park street. The terms are $300 at the time of sale and the balance in [illegible]

REPORT WHITMAN SALE.

The sale is reported of the John Peckham farm at No. 82 Washington street, Whitman, comprising thirty-five acres of land, a colonial style nine-room cottage, large barn and several other outbuildings. The purchaser was Emma M. Shannon. The Edward T. Harrington Co. were the brokers.

APARTMENT HOUSE UNDER WAY ON COMMONWEALTH AVE.



The above buildings represent the latest type of colonial apartment houses and are now in process of construction on the northeast corner of Warren and Allston streets, just off Commonwealth avenue in the Allston district.

The Colonial Real Estate Trust are the owners, and J. Scott McLearn, the well known Allston contractor, is doing the construction work. The architect is W. E. Harding of Hyde Park.

There will be three apartments to each entrance, each apartment to have seven rooms and reception hall, to be equipped with every modern convenience, including commodious glassed-in sun parlors and sleeping porches, and an artistic arrangement of front verandas. These apartments will be ready for occupancy early in November.

Charles A. Malley, the well-known Allston broker, is the renting agent.

SCIENTIFIC ASSESSING IN CAMBRIDGE

Special Tax Committee of Cambridge to Install Advanced System of Realty Assessment.

OUTLINE SYSTEM IN REPORT

From a report submitted to Mayor Good, it is learned that the special tax committee of Cambridge will have ready for operation in April, 1916, a scientific system of real estate assessment. Cambridge thus becomes the pioneer city of New England to adopt the [illegible] of taxation.

The report, covering forty typewritten pages, contains a complete description of the organization and methods of the tax departments of New York, Newark, Baltimore and Buffalo, followed by a discussion of the [illegible] and methods to be put in use in Cambridge. There are also [illegible] accompanying the report, made up of charts, diagrams, [illegible]

The report states that many cities make use of equalization maps to produce uniformity in assessments. No [illegible] city in New [illegible]. To accomplish uniformity, the equalization map is practically indispensable; for the purpose an outline map of the city is [illegible] sufficiently large to [illegible] to be printed between the street lines, and subdivided [illegible] may be convenient. [illegible] of each street, for each block, the unit value is entered. The map shows at a glance the proposed assessed value per unit on all sides of every block in the city.

"The [illegible] relation of value," to quote the report, "on one street with values on another, is at once apparent. From high valued points in the city, the unit values grade off towards the points of low value; and everywhere the values on one street interlock with the values on the next street, in a way that can be readily seen, understood and explained. Accuracy and precision are introduced into the assessment. The disturbing influences of abnormally high or low sales are minimized, and the assessors in these cities do what they should do—exercise their judgment in assessing all lots within a given area in their relative values to one another."

MUST HAVE STANDARD UNIT.

The task of the assessor is to measure the value of each lot and building in the city. To do this work accurately and scientifically he must necessarily have a standard of measure, a standard unit. "Of course the actual assessed value set down upon the tax roll will be in dollars, but [illegible] of that statement in dollars there should be entry somewhere in the tax records that the land value is composed of a given number of units of area, of a given value, and that the building likewise contains a certain number of units of dimension, each of a given value."

The enhancement of value of a corner lot, usually termed corner influence, is discussed at length. It appears the method in use for assessment in some cities is simply that of arbitrarily adding from 25 to 75 per cent. to the value of the lot, figured as an inside lot, to determine its corner value. Several writers, including King, Pleydell, Somers and Bernard, have announced rules for figuring corner influence. The operation of these is explained in the report. Except for the Bernard rule, now in use in Baltimore, they are complicated [illegible] of application. The Baltimore tax department figures the corner value of a lot by adding to its value, figured as an inside lot fronting on the main street, the value of the same lot figured as an inside lot fronting on the side street. This is considered the minimum value of the corner.

Similar to the rules and methods in use for figuring the assessment value of land, there is, the report explains, a classification of buildings, tables for cubic foot cost of buildings and depreciation tables, so that, insofar as the assessment of improvements is concerned, the methods are here [illegible] uniform.

[illegible] rules and methods to be [illegible] Cambridge the report goes into much detail.

EQUALIZATION MAP READY.

The equalization map has been prepared and is now in the office of the assessors. The city is divided into six sections, and each section is printed on a sheet six feet by eight feet. Before the next assessment period, the Board of Assessors will have placed on this map the unit values throughout the city.

The standard unit was determined from a study of available maps. The report states there are approximately 932 blocks in Cambridge. One hundred feet was established as the standard depth of the unit for business [illegible] sections in Cambridge. However, assessments will [illegible] of the square foot, [illegible] unit will have a value of one one-hundredth of the [illegible]-foot unit.

After a careful consideration of the conditions now existing in Cambridge, and a study of the possibilities of application of the various corner value rules, the committee have decided that for the present, at least, and until such time as more complete data can be gathered, the Bernard rule (used in Baltimore) can be satisfactorily applied in Cambridge. The method of scaling values from the [illegible] is recommended for adoption. This applies principally to business sections, where the lots near the corner are of greater value than lots near the centre of the block.

Boston American readers now have the opportunity of a lifetime to secure a good piano or player-piano. Our great will give you the world's-best pianos and player-pianos at a price-saving that will astonish you.

HOW WE DO IT

The purpose of this club is to bring together 100 people who want a high-grade piano in their home. If we do this quickly we can sell 100 pianos in a few days instead of weeks. This naturally makes an enormous reduction in our expense per piano—less clerk hire, less selling expense, etc.—because of quick sales. Then we pay the manufacturers spot cash, and they in turn cooperate with us, giving us a big cash discount. Every possible cent of expense we eliminate, and all these savings are taken from the selling price, giving you the best standard make pianos at a price and on terms hitherto thought impossible. Through this wonderful power of co-operation we sell you pianos and player-pianos of the best known makes at a lower price than you could buy elsewhere—and not only that, but also on terms to suit your convenience.

We deliver all pianos promptly — you enjoy your piano while paying for it. For full details, cut out and mail this coupon today.

754 LIVE MEN WANTED

to move up a notch, so took the courses in the Boston Y. M. C. A. Automobile School last year and a large percentage of them are now holding good positions. You can be a skilled man, too, and in line for a good paying position; it takes a few weeks, day or evening, and a comparatively small outlay.

COMPETITION——? Yes, but there is in every attractive line of employment, and think of the number of cars being built and sold and the old ones still running. CREAM RISES, and the more milk in the pan, the higher goes the cream. YOU should get ready to rise, so send at once for a catalogue of our School and enroll as a member in the greatest Association plant in the world, costing over a million and a half dollars, dormitories, gymnasium, garage, machine shop class and lecture rooms, large equipment, able corps of teachers, the best Automobile School in America.

Address for catalogue and complete information, Frank Palmer Speare, M. H., Director of Education, Boston Young Men's Christian Association, 316 Huntington Avenue, Boston, or telephone Back Bay 4400.

We are constantly hearing of the success of our men and should be glad to help you.

Courses are repeated every four weeks throughout the year, but enter NOW. Next day class opens September 13. Next evening class opens October 4.

Largest House of Its Kind in the World

We are selling our cars at the rate of 65 each week owing to the fact that we are able to purchase so many excellent cars from private individuals who must have cash at once. These private individuals come to us knowing we will supply the cash.

The cars we purchase must be late models and in excellent mechanical condition and are naturally cars that have had just the one owner, who has given them the best care.

These we offer for "Half Down and Balance Monthly," as low as they can be purchased for cash, only asking a small profit. Every car we offer for sale is guaranteed exactly as represented, and the fact that we are the largest dealers doing business, having the largest stock to select from, and offering the latest models at a lower price than you can purchase earlier models of the same make from others, is our biggest asset. A call will convince you of this fact. A few of our stock of over 200 cars are listed below.

INSANITY CAN BE CHECKED, DECLARES DR. F. E. WILLIAMS

Official of State Society for Mental Hygiene Tells of Campaign for Prevention.

Warnings and rules on how to help diminish the 3,000 insane being annually admitted to the Massachusetts hospitals are being prepared by the Massachusetts Society for Mental Hygiene as an initial step in a great State-wide prevention crusade soon to be launched.

The plan aims to head off insanity in the State and reduce it to the lowest possible figures. Instead of the present yearly increase the projectors prophesy a substantial decrease once their doctrine of prevention is universally understood.

"Study your ancestry for three generations back; if you find there no cases of hereditary insanity, be practically sure that you have no cause to worry," is the reassurance offered by Dr. Frankwood E. Williams, executive secretary of the Mental Hygiene Society.

"If you discover a sporadic case in some collateral line, like an aunt or an uncle of a distant relative, don't worry," he continues.

"If, on the other hand, a father or a grandparent or a directly related ancestor for three generations back became insane, 'have a care.'

INSANITY PREVENTABLE.

"Insanity can be prevented. To a degree, recovery also is possible. Prevention measures are the straightest road to decreasing our insane figures. Persons who think they are going insane and do so are rare.

"The strain of overwork and worry upon a mind with an hereditary predisposition toward insanity is what parents and grownups must be warned against.

"We find children in the intermediate schools suddenly becoming insane. A study usually reveals that their tendency is toward insanity. A similar condition exists among certain boys and girls in the high schools. Men in the stress of business break when they are thirty or forty years old. All of which means that the youth and grownup alike has stepped beyond the limit of his mental powers.

"To understand better: Everyone is born with a capacity to resist—to buffet the world. Everyone of us is different in power to withstand pressure. If pressure becomes too great upon a mind and physique with only a limited capacity, the person breaks and goes under. His mind gives way.

"Certain boys and girls as they grow up become insane. Three thousand such children have been committed in the past ten years. Certain women show no indication of mental weakness until they become mothers. People (always considering their background) rise to various levels, and then, if the predisposition is there and the strain becomes too great, go under.

"Disappointment in love never causes insanity; failure in business never does, neither does excessive grief. The cause of mental breakdown is inherent in the individual. Everything depends upon the amount of pressure which one is capable of resisting.

"And what is the answer to all this?

"Parents must know the heredity of their children and, if that background shows a weakness, they must always prevent such children from overstrain, whether in school or at play. Such a child should be fitted to an occupation out of doors where mental pressure is least.

TYPES OF CHILDREN.

"Two types of children are to be considered.

"The very bright, precocious, excessively ambitious child. If such a one is of bad stock this excessive desire to exceed others is frequently a symptom, and a bad one. Such a child can be saved if properly guided. If it receives no protection there is nothing that will save it.

"The second type is the sullen, morose child. He doesn't like to play; he day-dreams; he thinks and plans a lot, but does little; he may appear to read but he gets very little from it; he is interested in philosophy, is apt to be an intense faddist, becomes a physical cultist, he feels that he mustn't eat certain things; he takes cold baths and then perhaps changes to warm baths; he is filled with fads.

"These things in the predisposed child are bad signs. Such children must be guided. Parents must make efforts to understand them. There is no cause for alarm. A specialist should be called and common sense principles laid out for the upbringing of such children.

"The chances are very great that such a child will become insane unless something is done to prevent it. There are out-patient departments in all of our State hospitals where consultation and advice can be secured at no expense.

Some of these children cannot be saved, but properly guided many can.

"Adults with hereditary insanity among their ancestors should know it. A man who is 'out of joint' with his environment, who continually thinks that other persons are peculiar or wrong, who is always suspicious, who feels that he never gets his just dues, that his friends slight him, that people do not like him and do not understand him, who begins to lose sleep and is easily agitated and who knows that he has predisposition, should consult a specialist. If he does not the chances are pretty good that he will eventually give way mentally.

"The breaking point may occur at any age, providing the strain becomes too great.

"A rubber band snaps beyond so much tension; an egg shell bursts when pressed too hard; the mind acts similarly.

"Insanity is preventable and can be cured. The insane person starts on a plane with others. He is not of the defective type who never has the potentiality to reason and think, owing to actual physical defect in the brain.

"The majority of persons need never fear insanity. Most persons are normal in mental potentiality. Except through alcohol or disease they will never be counted among the 3,000 who annually are sent to insane institutions."

Chinese Fashions Arrive
Mandarin Suit for Morning

A morning gown direct from China.

Old Mother Fashion is not to be denied. Wars may stifle the ingenuity and enterprise of the Paris modistes, but she will find a way still to surprise and thrill the jaded pining for "something new."

So here we have from far off mysterious China a novelty to delight the heart of feminine fashion extremists. A Mandarin morning suit, if you please, in which to lounge and be comfortable.

These suits are for those with a well-filled purse, for there is hardly a limit to the extent of elaborateness and richness of design in which milady may indulge to please her fancy.

Brocaded satin, worked with golden dragons, or silvery decorations, forms the basis for the outside material, with the linings of gorgeously colored silks.

This photograph is just received from England and foreshadows a novelty that will soon arrive on our shores. That it will be accorded an hysterically, enthusiastic welcome is the prediction of the London fashion experts.

GREEN FOOD GOOD FOR POULTRY, SAYS PROF. STONEBURN

By Prof. FREDERIC H. STONEBURN.

(Copyright, 1915, by Mates-Mens Adv Co., Inc.)

The following quotation from the chapter on poultry feeding in Jordan's "The Feeding of Animals" is most timely just now, when hens are laying heavily and chicks making rapid growth:

"Succulent vegetable foods are eagerly eaten by domestic fowls. Aside from the beneficial effect on the health of the birds, it is important to use such foods so far as possible, for the nutriment they contain is cheaply obtained. With most rations the more nitrogenous fodders, such as clover, alfalfa and very immature grasses, are best. These foods also contain more of the needed lime than do grains. * * *

"At the time of greatest egg production the choice of bulky foods should preferably be confined to those of the most tender and succulent nature. Certain experiments also indicate that a ration which contains any considerable proportion of dry or woody coarse fodder, although finely ground, is not suited to young chicks, and that only the more succulent kinds of bulky foods, like the first shoots of grasses and clovers, should be fed in the fresh condition. * * *

"Another reason, sometimes a very important one, for using such foods as young clover, fresh or dried, is the effect on the color of the egg yolk. Eggs from hens which are fed only certain grain and animal substances generally have yolks of a pale yellow color. This is often objected to by those who have a preference for eggs with darker, orange-colored yolks. The liberal feeding of fresh or dried young clover, alfalfa or grass will generally insure the deepest coloration."

BENEFICIAL TO HEALTH.

Note these points: "Beneficial effect on the health of the birds," "nutriment cheaply obtained," "effect on the color of the egg yolk." Any one of these is sufficiently important to justify the poultryman in making a special effort, if necessary, to provide a regular supply of such material, always provided its cost is not greater than its actual value.

Fresh lawn clippings make most excellent green food, and a healthy flock of hens or chicks will consume large quantities of them. These clippings should be fed before they have become wilted and dry from exposure or heated from being left in piles for a time. One may secure a considerable quantity of these clippings from a well-kept lawn of average size. And then there is always an opportunity to secure a supply from the neighbors' lawns.

Frequently the available amount of lawn clippings is in excess of what can be immediately used. The surplus should be spread out in the sun, thoroughly dried and packed away in sacks for later use. When needed this dried grass should be soaked in hot water to restore its freshness and fed alone or incorporated in the moist mash.

The home garden also yields much succulent green food. Surplus lettuce, spinach and similar materials, even weeds, are most acceptable to the hungry flock.

Where the double yard system is used the problem of supplying green food during the warm months is easily solved. The birds are permitted to use one yard, while a crop is started in the other. After the young plants are well established the flock is transferred to this yard and the other cultivated and seeded. This process is repeated several times during the season, with the result that the fowls always have access to a plentiful supply of fresh, tender greens and the soil is kept fresh and clean, since the growing vegetation removes all accumulated filth.

GRASS AND CLOVER GOOD.

Many crops are available for this purpose. A mixture of fine grass and clover is excellent, but is seldom used because other crops of quicker and more luxuriant growth are preferred. The following combinations may be safely recommended: Rye and vetch; rye, vetch and clover; peas and oats; peas and barley; dwarf Essex rape; cow peas and millet; wheat and clover.

Of course, these are used with due reference to soil, climate and season, varying according to the section of the country in which the poultry plant is located.

Perhaps the best green food is alfalfa, and it frequently happens that the flock may be given access to a well-established alfalfa field. Of course, this will be cut occasionally and the surplus cured and such a plan insures a continuous growth of fresh leaves.

Occasionally we find a poultryman whose land is so heavily stocked that he must use every foot of it for poultry runs. Of course, under such conditions it is virtually impossible to secure a good stand of green growth, as the fowls scratch out and eat the seed and destroy the young plants before they become established. Green food frames or protectors should then be used.

These, frames are made of narrow boards, five or six inches wide, nailed together in the form of a shallow box without top or bottom. Six by twelve feet and five by ten feet are convenient sizes. Narrow stiffening strips are next nailed across the top covered with inch-mesh poultry netting.

A seed bed of proper size is made and planted, and the frame set in position above it. This effectually prevents the birds from disturbing the growing plants until the green shoots push their way through the netting. As the crop grows it is eaten off at the top, the roots being left uninjured. As soon as rapid growth ceases the frame is removed and placed in a new spot.

Polo Players Save Fisherman in Boat

MANCHESTER, Sept. 11.—Three wealthy young men, here to take part in the polo games at the Myopia Hunt Club in Hamilton, risked their lives in a small boat to rescue an Italian fisherman, whose motorboat was afire off Kettle Island at Magnolia. Charles A. Munn, Jr., of Devon, Pa.; Drexel Paul of Philadelphia and Thomas Bloomer of Boston were the men.

The flames had driven the fisherman from his boat and he was clinging to a line at the prow when saved.

WHO'S GOING TO GET BEST POSTAL JOB IN HINGHAM

The Hingham postoffice is in the limelight again.

Not so many years ago the postoffice grew so fast that the department ordered the city delivery inaugurated and letter carriers under civil service rules were appointed, a new building was selected, letter boxes were placed all over town, and everybody sat back and said: "Why live in the city when you can have all the comforts of home right here?"

About a year later something happened: no one has ever been able to actually find out, but one night the letter boxes came up and were sent away; the carriers were dismissed; the postmaster's salary was cut down and the "back to the farm" kind of a postoffice greeted the residents of the town when they awoke the following morning.

Now the only Republican postmaster that this office has had since Grover Cleveland upset old-time policies, during his first administration, finds that his four-year term expired two weeks ago and Democrats are in the field for his $2,100 a year job.

STILL SORTING THE MAIL.

Rumor yesterday had it in the town made famous by the late Governor Long that George S. Marsh, the present incumbent, had been told sort of informally that he could not have a reappointment. Postmaster Marsh, however, seems to be in the dark, but is still sorting the mail.

George Cushing, postmaster from the time Cleveland became president until William Howard Taft tipped him out and appointed Marsh, is a candidate. Edmund Daly, who for years has been the Democratic party when Democrats were on the losing end and there was work to be done, is also a candidate. Incidentally, there have been one or two other men mentioned, but they are not in the running.

Cushing pleads guilty to leading a torchlight procession in honor of Cleveland's first victory. He also says he likes Taft and he doesn't care for Roosevelt.

Just now the ex-postmaster, hotel proprietor and chief of the fire department is pretty strong for the Wilson administration. He has applied for his old job.

Postmaster Marsh has sent on to Washington a long petition of business men of the town, and the late Governor Long wrote a letter to the Washington authorities favoring his retention.

Daly has the backing of the Democratic Town Committee. He also has a strong petition.

Cushing got an appointment under every Republican administration except Roosevelt's. This caused the Democrats to inquire, a few weeks ago, as to where George stands politically.

PLACE YOUR BETS.

The district just now is represented by a Republican congressman, Joseph Walsh of New Bedford. The two ex-Democratic Congressman, Foss and Thacher, seem to be in disfavor with the Democrats of the town and the only man, according to the members of the Democratic town committee, who has any say-so now about the Hingham postmastership, is Dr. John W. Coughlin of Fall River, a member of the Democratic National Committee. Dr. Coughlin will recommend the name of the man to be postmaster of Hingham.

Just now two men, if not three, are sitting nervously around. Betting is even for and against Marsh, a Republican.

County Clubs Have a Full Schedule Ahead

Reports from the committee that handled the recent successful outing of the Roscommon Benevolent Association will be made at the meeting to be held on Thursday evening, September 16, in Deacon Hall. The outing was one of the most enjoyable yet held by this popular association, and the members are giving much praise to the committee of arrangements.

* * *

The benevolent fund of the Galway Men's Benevolent Association will receive a handsome addition as a result of the recent field day. A complete report will be given to the members at the meeting next Sunday afternoon in Deacon Hall.

Inaugurate New Tourist Feature

Passengers traveling to far Western points at the most reasonable rates often figure that eating on the train is a very large item. Colpitts Ticket and Tourist Agency, No. 333 Washington street and No. 146 Canal street, take pleasure in announcing that many of the lines on which their lowest rates to the West apply have adopted a new feature.

In order to eliminate the necessity of going into the dining car, they have inaugurated the practice of serving light lunches to passengers in the chair cars. The innovation is proving very popular, according to the officials of the road. The food is the same as that served in the diner, a waiter passing through the train at meal hours to take orders. Coffee is also served to passengers in the tourist cars who carry their own lunches.

Posse Gym School Opens September 30

The Posse Normal School of Gymnastics will open September 30 with Hartvig Nissen, for many years instructor of gymnastics in the Boston schools, in full charge. He will succeed the Baroness Posse as president of the school, the Baroness becoming president emeritus.

The new president was a pioneer in introducing gymnastics into the schools of this country, his first work being in Washington, where he remained eight years. In 1891 he was called to this city. He stayed here ten years, going to the Brookline schools in 1901. For the last twenty-four years he has taught Swedish gymnastics in the Harvard Summer school.

Ten Thousand at Lawn Party of St. Ambrose

Ten thousand people attended the first lawn party in aid of the new church building fund by the parishioners of St. Ambrose Church, Fields Corner, Dorchester, on the grounds surrounding the Degnan estate, Freeport, Mill and Everett streets, yesterday afternoon and evening.

Every society connected with the parish gave a helping hand in making the party a success, and Rev. John H. Harrigan, pastor of the church, Patrick O'Hearn, Building Commissioner; Rev. Joseph P. Murphy, of the church, and J. Paul Canty, general chairman of the committees, were pleased with the results, which will materially help toward constructing the new church.

Many tables dotted the pretty grounds and were in charge of parishioners.

Heed Call to Autumn Woods in Berkshires

The lure of early Autumn in the Berkshires has found an answering note among Boston society this week.

Mrs. Robert Gould Shaw and Mrs. Winthrop T. Hodges have been registered at the Wendell Hotel, Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Alfred T. Emmons of Brookline, Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge; Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer and Mrs. R. Dudley Peters, the Aspinwall, Lenox.

A group registered at the Curtis Hotel included Mrs. S. Reed Anthony and Miss Ruth Anthony of the Beverly Farms colony, Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Potter and Miss Mary C. Sears, all of Boston.

Mrs. Gordon Abbott and her daughters Katherine and Eleanor of Boston and West Manchester are registered at the Aspinwall, while Mr. and Mrs. A. Emerson Benson and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Storrow have been guests at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge.

These various parties journeyed by automobile, as did Colonel John J. Whipple of Boston, who also made a stop at the Aspinwall.

PYTHIANS DINE AT BRUNSWICK

Forward Movement of the Order Boomed in Conference of Greater Boston Lodges.

The Pythian Forward Movement, which aims to increase the Massachusetts membership of the Knights of Pythias by 3,000 before December 31, was boomed at a conference and dinner of Pythian officials at the Hotel Brunswick last evening.

One hundred and fifty attended. They included the Grand Lodge officers and committeemen who live in this section and the deputy grand chancellors, keepers of record and seal and masters of finance of about fifty-seven lodges of Boston and environs.

In addition to the thirty-seven lodges meeting in Boston limits other lodges represented includes those of Canton, Watertown, Dedham, Arlington, Brookline, Winthrop, Reading, Medford, Newton, and the two each of Waltham, Somerville and Cambridge.

Instructions to deputies were given by Dr. Roger S. York, Grand Chancellor. Instructions to the keepers of records and seals and to the masters of finance were given by George W. Howe, Grand Keeper of Records and Seals.

Grand Chancellor York said in part: "One of the great features of the Fall campaign, of which details will soon be sent out, will be the 'Rathbone smoke-fests,' at which will be used the pipe formerly owned and used by Justus H. Rathbone, founder of the Knights of Pythias, to whose far-seeing visioin we owe this great order."

Other speakers included George S. Harrington, P. G. C.; former speaker John N. Cole, G. T.; John Ballantyne, Sup. Rep., and Harlan P. Knight.

Lynn Officials Score High Cost of Autos

Finance Commissioner Roy F. Bergengren of Lynn has denounced the high cost of keeping up the automobiles of the various city departments.

It is agreed that the automobile department is one of the most extravagant in the city's control. Commissioner Cornet says it cost the city $22,000 to keep its automobiles last year.

STATE TRAINS OFFICERS TO LEAD IN WAR

"Second West Point" Preparing Massachusetts to Meet National Crisis.

Massachusetts is to be ready for war. The State is preparing to supply the great American deficiency in national crises—the lack of trained officers to command its volunteers.

At the "Second West Point," the Massachusetts Training School, the State is educating 130 young men, who, when they are graduated will be thoroughly equipped to lead in the defence of the country. The institution, the first of its kind in America, is in its infancy, but it has demonstrated its ability to train men who are almost as well qualified as the officers who hold West Point diplomas.

The interest manifested in the training school indicates that in time the militia will select all its new officers from among the graduates, thereby avoiding the handicaps which sometimes result from inefficiency.

The credit for the conception of the idea belongs principally to Major-General William Pew of Gloucester, a former commander of the Second Brigade of the militia, and to Lieutenant-Colonel Willis W. Stover of the Fifth Massachusetts Infantry, commandant of the school. Lieutenant Augustus C. Coleman, an officer of wide experience and deep interest in military matters, is the adjutant of the school.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROVES.

This training school has been plodding along for two years without any blaze of trumpets or sounding of drums, but it has done such successful work that Governor Walsh, commander-in-chief, has heard encouraging reports from the War Department at Washington.

The students of the school serve for two years in junior and senior classes, and when they are graduated they are qualified for commissions in the militia of the State and the Volunteers.

And the citizens of this Commonwealth not conversant with military matters, but who have to help foot some of the tax bills, may be interested to learn that the young men who are graduates from the school may at any time be selected for commissions in the regular army.

No man can become a student at the Massachusetts Training School unless he is enlisted in the militia, and that means the term of service from September 1 to December 1 at the school is only a part of his regular duty as a member of a military organization. The training school plays no favorites. It will take members from every branch of the service, from infantry to cavalry, artillery to signal service.

The school is the pet of the war department insofar as it has control over the military affairs of any State and it has assigned able officers to serve as instructors.

Further than that, the students of this school, in bright new uniforms, distinct from any other in the State, light blue trousers with a black stripe and dark blue coat and a special cap insignia, last June camped with the cadets at West Point and participated in every move that the West Pointers made for a week.

Massachusetts truthfully asserts that this is the first time any citizen soldiery of the country has camped and worked with the West Point cadets. This advantage was gained through the efforts of Adjutant-General Charles H. Cole and his commander-in-chief, who, more than any other one Governor, has realized the importance of the militia.

GOOD MATERIAL CHOSEN.

To become a member of this training school, which opened its third term last Saturday at the old Framingham campground, a militiaman must be recommended by his commanding officer as good material for a commissioned officer. Each organization has two men in the school, and the colonels make three appointments at large.

Unlike Plattsburg, where the raw material, that is, business and professional men, are whipped into shape as best they can be in thirty days, the school conducted by the State, and the only one of its kind in the country, takes young men who have enlisted in the militia and trains them for officers in two years.

An unsuccessful attempt was made last year in the Legislature to amend the laws with respect to commissioning officers. It has been recommended to the next Legislature by the adjutant general's office that second lieutenants be selected only from an eligible list made up of the graduates of the training school, graduates of West Point, Annapolis or any other school approved by the war or navy departments.

This means, if the amendment is passed, that any young man fortunate enough to be selected by his commanding officer for a two-years' term at the Training School, informally announces himself a candidate for a commission.

A movement is on foot by the commanding officers of the militia to have this school permanently installed in the State's newest and biggest armory out on Commonwealth avenue, that will be ready for occupancy before the end of the year.

The non-commissioned and commissioned officers of the three school companies come from the senior class each year. Thus a private in any company in the militia, through his own efforts, may be placed in command of a company of militiamen, although some members of his own organization may outrank him.

Results count in the school and the officers who are there as instructors keep the record and each day the marks are recorded. When a man is falling off in his work he is immediately taken to task.

The school had its inception away back in the Spanish war days, while some of the officers of the Fifth Infantry were awaiting the mustering out of the militia from the regular service. General Erastus M. Weaver, now in charge of the Bureau of Militia Affairs, was then a colonel of volunteers, and it was he who suggested that some sort of a school should be established by every State in the Union. It was not until 1913 that Massachusetts made the initial move.

It is the intention of Colonel Stover to have the training school go into camp next September at Hingham on the camp ground of the First Corps of Cadets and to have them remain in camp five days.

Ray Cox a Real Farmer and Outdoor Girl

'Twin Beds' Actress Makes 300 Acres Pay

Picks Up Big Tract in Rhode Island—and, You May Believe, It Was a Bargain.

Ray Cox in two of her favorite pastimes in her outdoor, invigorating life—the only life worth while when free from the glare of footlights. "Wading in" to fish for trout is just to her liking, as the picture shows. She is also seen on a day's hunting with her dog.

There is no pretence about Miss Ray Cox's outdoor life—it is the only one she lives. Miss Cox is a truly scientific farmer and has made her farm a source of income as well as self-supporting.

"How did I become a farmer?" repeated Miss Cox the other evening in her dressing room at the Park Square Theatre, when discussing her farm between the acts of "Twin Beds," and she continued, quite facetiously: "Well, just say I was so bucolic I couldn't keep away from it." And then, quite seriously, for her farm is a very serious subject to Miss Cox, she told her story.

"I really care a great deal for the outdoors. I love the country. I never get tired of looking at long stretches of trees, hedges or any part of the country. I always hunted a great deal, at least I went hunting, not boasting that I killed anything. But I got all the benefit of a hunt, I saw the country and went riding over the hills and got the good sweet air of the open.

"I was hunting with a party of friends several years ago. We had started from Providence. As we jogged along the road we passed a beautiful farm, big, roomy barn, pretty, substantial house and everything on a large scale. I spoke my admiration and one of the party agreed with me and added the interesting information that he thought it was the cheapest farm in Rhode Island. 'How cheap?' I asked, and when I heard the price I nearly fell off my horse. Here was a farm that more than $100,000 had been spent on to make it beautiful, and it was being offered for $5,000 cash or a little more on mortgage.

GRABS A FARM BARGAIN.

"I suppose I have as much love of a bargain as the average woman and the bargain appeal alone was enough to make me uncomfortable until I had made sure the farm was going to be mine. I bought it, and if the farm had turned out to be absolutely solid rock not fit to grow a blade of grass I should never have regretted it."

The farm lies about midway between Providence and Westerly, R. I., and is a 300-acre tract that was part of the Nicholls estate, the settling of which enabled Miss Cox to get her bargain.

Starting with a few cows, Miss Cox was soon impressed with the money-making possibilities of an unusual dairy farm, and that is why she stuck so closely to the raising of dairy stock. Providence proved a ready market for her products at exceptional prices, for the pure food commissioner of the State took pains to announce publicly that the products of her farm were the purest and of the highest class of any examined in the entire State. Miss Cox is more proud of that record than she is of the scrapbooks containing long lists of stage triumphs.

Miss Cox has devised a plan that may eventually revolutionize the ice cream industry, and should her scheme meet with unusual success, it will be another notable achievement woman has made in man's domain. Miss Cox sold considerable cream to ice cream dealers, and knowing that they were profiting by the deal, conceived the idea of making ice cream right on the farm from the pure fresh cream. Being a purely scientific and up-to-date farm, all the hauling was done with automobiles. There had been devices rigged up by means of which the automobiles were placed upon stilts and the power used for milking the cows, and for all other purposes where power was required.

FARM MADE ICE CREAM.

Consequently it was easy to arrange for the freezing of the ice cream. Then came the real innovation. Miss Cox designed an individual container for the ice cream, sealed and packed in the ice for shipment. The result was ice cream right from the farm to the user, untouched in the making. So popular was the innovation that the demand now exceeds the supply and Miss Cox is planning to increase the output of this branch of the farm.

She is planning another innovation that will possibly make the place famous among epicures. It is the manufacture of a new pure sausage made from milk-fed pigs. There have been added to the stock of the farm several droves of pigs, all high-grade, registered stock, as is the case with all the animals on the Cox farm, and machinery is now being placed in a specially prepared building for the making of this new kind of sausage under highly sanitary conditions.

It is not all business, however, on the Cox farm. Miss Cox is very fond of riding, and keeps a pony and a hunter at her stable. These never lack exercise when she is at the estate, and she knows every foot of the country for many miles about by actual exploration. "Do I hunt?" she repeated after the questioner. "Yes, but don't ask me what. I usually go with parties, and we hunt everything. What in particular? Well, partridges, but be sure and mention that I don't think I ever killed one, for if I said I killed partridges, the old hunters would know I was exaggerating. Very few people ever kill them on the wing; on the ground it is possible to topple them over. They have given me credit for getting some on the ground, but I always thought some other gun than mine might have hit them."

With fishing it is different. Miss Cox has been most successful as an angler, and the fishing outfits never accumulate any dust when she is at "home." Sailing is almost a passion with her, and she has mastered all the rudiments of navigation, being able to handle a sailboat with ease, in fact to the extent that she neglects the power yacht used for the transportation of the farm products over Narragansett Bay. That Miss Cox goes into her sports in earnest, as she does at her farming, is indicated by the pictures of her sport costumes. They are designed for utility above beauty and everything else.

Events of the "Anti" Campaign

Mrs. A. J. George of the Anti-Suffrage Association, will address a meeting at the town of Harvard tomorrow evening. Mrs. Henry Prescott White will address a meeting at Townsend.

Tuesday evening Mrs. George will address Nemasket Grange at Middleboro, and Mrs. White is to speak at the Farmers' Club at Medway.

Wednesday evening Mrs. George will address St. Jean Baptist Union at Haverhill. Mrs. White will speak at the Bridgewater Fair.

Thursday Mrs. Foxcroft will speak at Saugus. In the evening Mrs. George will adress Gardner Women's Club in the Gardner Town Hall, and Mrs. Thomas Allen will speak in Richmond Town Hall.

Friday Mrs. Matthew Sullivan will speak at Beechcroft. That night Mrs. George will speak in Ladies' Hall, Northfield, Mass.

Cambridge K. of C. Council Activities

North Cambridge council, K. of C., is to give an entertainment in the new Harvard Theatre, North Cambridge, Wednesday evening, September 22. The committee in charge consists of Thomas P. O'Neill, Robert Schoonover and Thomas Fogarty.

Ozanum Council of Cambridge, is to hold a first and second degree on Thursday evening, September 16. A third degree is to be held later. The council is making arrangements for the celebration of Columbus Day and also for an entertainment in November. The council will soon start a series of Sunday afternoon talks by prominent men.

FARRAR FILMS TO BE SHOWN AT SYMPHONY HALL

Boston is to be the first city to see the motion pictures of Geraldine Farrar as Carmen. Symphony Hall has been chosen as the location, and Friday, October 1, for the premier. Miss Farrar herself will be in the audience with a large party of friends to see herself for the first time in the completed picture.

The pictures will be given by Morris Gest and C. A. Ellis, in agreement with the Lasky Company, which made the pictures.

It was stated that although the photo-play version of "Carmen" was completed several weeks ago, the choice as to the city which should see "Our Geraldine" as the star of the "movies" was not decided by the prima donna until the other day. Miss Farrar reserved the right of choice. None more seriously than Miss Farrar regards the future of the photo-play as a wonderful medium of dramatic expression. She frankly says she is anticipating a success in motion pictures quite as brilliant as her extraordinary successes in other fields.

Miss Farrar chose Boston as the first city in the land for her photo-drama debut, because Symphony Hall would lend to the occasion a musical and artistic value in keeping with what the star and the producers have tried to impart in the picturization of "Carmen."

In the presentation of the photo-play a new era in the exhibition of motion pictures is likely to come into vogue. The interior of Symphony Hall will be specially decorated and an operatic orchestra of fifty pieces has been engaged.

S. M. Rothaphal, formerly managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, and the best-known motion picture exhibitor in the world, because of his unique and artistic ideas, has been specially engaged by the Paramount and Lasky Companies and Morris Gest to come to Boston with elaborate arrangements for "Carmen."

Miss Farrar herself has laid particular stress on the importance of the musical setting for the photo drama, and it is said that her advice as the leading woman musician in the world was sought in the making of these plans.

News of the Suffrage Campaign

The Boston Equal Suffrage Association will hold a public meeting in Faneuil Hall Tuesday evening in honor of the fifty-eighth anniversary of the birthday of Alice Stone Blackwell, president of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association.

Miss Blackwell, who has been spending a few weeks at the old Stone estate in Chilmark, is expected to return to the city in time to be present and speak at the meeting.

Volunteers are to be asked for from the audience to help in the suffrage primary day work. These noted suffragists will speak: Miss Florence Short of the "Experience" company, from the Shubert Theatre; Miss Anna Bowen of the executive board of the Central Labor Union; Miss Annie Malloy, president Telephone Operators' Union; Miss Minnie Ryan of the Minimum Wage Commission, and Miss Florence Allen, prominent attorney from Cleveland, O.

Mrs. Robert Gould Shaw, Miss Margaret Foley, and several other prominent Massachusetts Suffragists, are giving their services to the New Jersey campaign. The party arrived in New York on Wednesday, where they were entertained by the New York Association. Miss Foley, in a new hat, named after her by a Milford manufacturer, made two stirring addresses to enormous crowds. She will speak three times a day while in New Jersey, touching the great industrial centres.

• • •

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, who spoke at Holyoke on Friday evening and at Waltham last night, will continue her present speaking tour for next week as follows: Monday evening, Marshfield; Tuesday evening, Quincy; Wednesday evening, Hyannis; Thursday evening, Plymouth; Friday evening, Marlboro and Saturday evening, Newton. She returns to New York after her Newton meeting.

Parade Headquarters have been opened at No. 587 Boylston street for the "Suffrage Victory Parade," on Saturday, October 16.

The parade will be reviewed by Governor Walsh at the State House and Mayor Curley at City Hall. It will form along Beacon street and start promptly at 2 o'clock, passing by the State House across Tremont street, down School street, up Washington to Bromfield to Tremont to Boylston to Huntington avenue to Mechanics Building, where a monster rally will be held.

Hanson Grange, at an enthusiastic meeting this week, passed a resolution favoring the Woman Suffrage amendment to the State Constitution. A letter from State Master Chapman was read stating that he had voted for the referendum in the last two legislatures, and that he would vote for the amendment and give it his hearty support!

A letter from Charles M. Gardner of Westfield, who represents Massachusetts in the National Grange, was also read, in which he says: "I feel there is a great opportunity for our organization to exert its influence in the coming campaign for that which is known to be for the greatest good of Massachusetts in all the coming future." There were only two dissenting votes to the resolution.

OSGOOD IS OUT FOR GUY A. HAM

Merchant Pays Tribute to Republican Candidate from a Business Standpoint.

Charles E. Osgood, president of The C. E. Osgood Company of Boston, sent an open letter to Guy A. Ham last night indorsing Mr. Ham's candidacy for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor.

After accepting Ham's invitation to serve on his campaign committee, Mr. Osgood said in his letter:

"Your public utterances have demonstrated that you understand the necessity of taking stringent measures to correct the abuses attendant upon the expenditure of public monies, which is loaded upon the business interests and which is becoming so serious that it places the industries of New England at a distinct disadvantage in competing with similar lines of business located in States where the burden is not so grevious.

"Having been identified with several banking institutions you have come in touch with business men and appreciate their needs and necessities. You have taken part in the organization of enterprises which are affording employment to Massachusetts citizens. From your association with those organizations you have been afforded an opportunity to understand the requirements of the business interests of the State."

BETHLEHEM, GENERAL MOTORS WERE WEAKEST WAR STOCKS

Markets Remain Quiet While International Bankers Arrange for Foreign Loan.

By W. M. ROSS,
FINANCIAL EDITOR.

Stocks were on a lower level at the end of the week, opening down yesterday and finishing at recessions, although above their low for the day. Markets were quiet and without sensational features. Prices had a narrow range, although a few of the war order variety sustained considerable loss. Bethlehem Steel was off 8, General Motors 7½, N. Y. Air Brake 3, and Willy-Overland 2½, while a few declined a point. But in this, as in other groups, the average recession was fractional. Trading in railroads was limited and none was especially weak. Rock Island closed 1¼ higher and at that time was the strongest on the list.

Chesapeake and Ohio was under considerable pressure at one time, but partially recovered. U. S. Steel was the market leader and was off ⅞ at its worst. But it had rallied a little at the end. Utah was the strongest of coppers, but none was active.

The supply of stocks appeared to be limited and, as usual of late, there was buying on the scale down by large interests. This prevented much of a recessional. More uncertainty than nervousness attended operations in New York. Traders, as a class, realize this is a period when it is difficult to foresee what may be the next war development. It is doubted by spectators that there will be a break in the diplomatic relations of this country and Teutonic powers, but there is less complacency over the international situation than existed a week ago. Room traders are inclined to operate on the bear side and some small bulls sold stocks yesterday because of doubts as to what may happen over Sunday. The recent reaction has extended the short interest, something which the market is said to have needed. The Boston market was dull, weak and uninteresting.

SOME FAVORABLE FACTORS.

Bulls are firm in the conviction that fundamentals warrant an advance in security prices. They say the great harvest in sight has not been discounted and that it means a trade boom before long. Eastern roads, which increased their net revenue $24 a mile in July, have been getting additional business because of munition shipments. Western roads are looking ahead to as large a crop business as they have ever had. But the gains made by most roads has been through cutting down operating expenses rather than because of an increased volume of freight. But more of that is moving. The net surplus of idle freight cars in the United States and Canada decreased 81,705 cars in August.

The placing of a foreign loan, which may be anywhere from half to a billion dollars, in this country, is expected to spur business, as the money borrowed by the French and the British will be spent here for supplies. If domestic trade was as active as munitions purveying, no one in business in the United States would have any cause for complaint. It is reported by commercial agencies that the country's trade as a whole is improving. In fact, all signs point towards prosperity. It ought not to be of the mushroom specie, in view of the fact that the improvement has been so gradual. In nature slow growth tends towards permanency.

When business starts to boom there will be plenty of money on hand for fostering expansion. In fact, with so much cash ultra conservative financiers are afraid that within a few months this country will be in the midst of the greatest era of inflation it has ever known. Yesterday's bank statement as to actual condition showed the surplus reserves of clearing house members increased $15,012,080 in a week to a total of $224,122,990, which breaks all records. The average condition increase was $367,910 to a total of $209,886,840.

But there was no material change in money market conditions. Rates may advance if the foreign loan amounts to as much as has been predicted. One of the London envoys who are in New York to arrange for it is quoted as saying that the Anglo-French allies want all the money they can raise here. The foreign exchange market improved as soon as the delegation from London and Paris arrived, but higher quotations were probably due as much to sentiment as to demand for bills.

As to bank clearings in this country for the week ended Friday total returns to the Financial Chronicle show $2,796,133,849 against $1,956,343,336 last, an increase of 43.3 per cent.

COTTON AND WHEAT.

Prices ranged from ten to twelve points higher in the New York Cotton Market at the outset. Wall Street renewed buying and the Liverpool market was stronger than expected. Reactions from the highest prices happened after the call. The South sold October and there was some realizing. Prices were steady and as follows at the close:

September 10.00-3, October 10.12-13, November 10.22 bid, December 10.45-47, January 10.64-65, February 10.74 bid, March 10.94 flat, April 11.04 bid, May 11.19-20, June 11.26 bid, July 11.35-37, August 11.41 bid.

At the opening of the Chicago Grain Market wheat was up ½-¾c, corn was ½-¼c higher and oats were unchanged to ⅛c higher, while provisions had advanced. At the close wheat was ⅝c higher to ¾c lower, corn was ½c lower to 1c higher, and oats were ⅛c lower to ⅛c higher. Provisions closed strong. Closing prices were May wheat 98¼, September 99¼, December 95, May corn 58½, September 72⅝, December 57¼-¾, May oats 38⅞, September 36¾, December 36⅛-¼, September pork 12.10, October 12.20, December 12.50 bid, January 14.97, September lard 8.02, January 8.57, October 8.02 bid, January ribs 8.30, September 7.85, October 7.92.
